Duquesne Company Shipping Concentrates From New Mill

The freighting of concentrates from the new mill at the Duquesne mine was commenced Wednesday, about half a car-load being brought down by the several freight outfitts.

J. F. Combs, one of the owners of the Eldorado group, was in from Harshaw Tuesday.

The Hardtmayer Mining Company built a house this week on its property east of town.

The Patagonia Lumber Company is shipping a car of mine timbers for the Duquesne mine.

The Sterling Borax Company received a car of mine timbers this week from the local lumber company for the Flux mine.

Mark Lully of Nogales, who is interested in the Wandering Jew mine in the Alto section, was a business visitor here this week.

Chas. H. Hoffman, one of the best known mining engineers in the southwest, is here from Smithville, Texas, on professional business.

The ground in Temporal canyon which Mr. Putnam is leasing from Judge A. S. Henderson is showing up well, several feet of ore having been crosscut in a tunnel. A drift will be run on the ore body.

Harry Stevens and Marshall McDonnell were in from the Blue Eagle mine this week and report that the work is going ahead with good progress being made and that the ore shoot is showing up well.

A. C. Sanders, mining engineer, who has been here some time, returned Saturday from a business trip, accompanied by H. M. Harrison, a mining man, and several properties have been inspected by the gentlemen this week.

John Agnoll of Congress, better known among miners as "Russian Jack," was recently granted damages in the federal court at Prescott against the Santa Fe Railroad Company in the sum of $7,000 because of injuries received by the falling of a berth.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL NOTES

O. F. Ashburn made a large shipment of cattle Thursday from the Pennsylvania ranch, stock being loaded at the Sonoita yards.

"San Simon" Jack Lassiter was in yesterday from his mining property in the Red Rock mountains and reports good progress being made.

M. H. Hogan, Rich Farrell and Mike Long, were in from the Trench mine Saturday and went to Nogales on the evening train, passing several days in the county seat.

Mrs. Anton Klein came in from Harshaw, Tuesday, after a several days' stay there, and left Wednesday morning for her home in Bisbee. Mr. Klein, who was expected down from the coast, was detained there by mining business and will be here later.

Mrs. C. C. Chapman and Miss Willie Chapman motored down from Alto Tuesday and were shopping at the local stores.

John Archer, son in-law of Mr. and Mrs. James Kane, was here this week from Tucson, where he is in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company.

Mr. H. McFadden, one of the old time stockmen in this section and formerly foreman of the Empire ranch, but now a resident of California, was a visitor here this week.

Frank Johnson, son of J. R. Johnson of Crittenden, joined the United States navy during the recent trip of Mr. Johnson and son to the exposition, entering as an apprentice electrician at the naval training station on Goat Island, in San Francisco bay. Mr. Johnson received a letter from his son on Thursday stating that he was entirely contented with life at the training station.

Mrs. A. C. Best and Mrs. Richard Farrell were here last Saturday from Harshaw shopping and Mrs. Best had her eyes examined by Dr. H. A. Schell.

W. H. Land, vice president and manager of the Santa Cruz Valley Bank and Trust Company, and Mrs. Land motored up from Nogales last Sunday, returning the same evening.

Perry J. Wilson of the San Rafael Valley threshed and graded four sacks of beans, which were stolen last week while he was absent. Two of the sacks, it is claimed, were found here, but no complaint has yet been filed.

Benjamin Wilson, who has been passing several weeks with Mrs. Wilson at his ranch in the San Rafael valley, came in last Friday and left Saturday morning for Jerome to resume his work in the engineering department of the United Verde Copper Company.

There will be a change here in local S. P. circles the first of October. Nicholas Johnson, the regular foreman of the Patagonia section, will have charge of the quarry to be opened at Sanford mountain, a few miles west of Patagonia. The Patagonia and Crittenden sections will be consolidated under the foremanship of J. R. Johnson, at present in charge of the Crittenden section. John Whalen, who has had charge of the Patagonia section during the summer, will be transferred to a section on the main line. He left for Tucson this morning.

R. N. Keaton, the San Rafael Valley merchant and rancher, was in town yesterday and took out a load of farm machinery, including a sulky gang plow, bean and pea thresher and a power corn sheller. Mr. Keaton has a large field of cane and has made 300 gallons of molasses and will make about 700 gallons more. He is the San Rafael Valley commissioner for the county fair and reports that the Valley will have some fine exhibits.

HE MADE BEQUEST OF BRAIN

Man of Eminence Has the Idea of Advancing Scientific Study by the Action.

Announcement was made a short time ago that Dr. Leland O. Howard, chief of the United States bureau of entomology, had declared to the American Association for the Advancement of Science that he would bequeath his brain for scientific study to a school that specializes in neurology. A number of other scientists who attended the meeting expressed admiration for the doctor's action and are reported to be considering similar bequests of their own brains.

There was a British physician named Robert Peebles who created a sensation in London and Edinburgh several years ago by his insistent coaxing of athletes for the privilege of studying their bodies after death. He had been experimenting with the muscles and had arrived at what his associates termed a fantastic notion that some sort of operation could be performed on the leg of the human runner so that his speed could be increased. Leapers and high jumpers were his hobby, and in the course of five years it was estimated that he had examined the leg muscles of nearly a thousand men, making comparisons with the running and leaping muscles of the frog, the deer, the greyhound and other animals.

Peebles was a man of means, and after he had succeeded in inducing half a dozen athletes of reputation to "will him their legs" the attention of surgeons was attracted. They took the matter under consideration at one of their quarterly meetings and warned Peebles they would have him committed to a sanitarium if he continued his strange pursuit. Peebles defied them and they had a commission appointed. While his sanity was being tested Peebles died. In his will he bequeathed his brain to the commission.

War Hits Rheumatism.

Sodium salicylate, the friend of sufferers from rheumatism, is selling today at $2.40 a pound, while before the war it only cost 20 cents a pound, remarks the New York World. Also, it is sold in this country only under the condition that none of it will be exported.

The reason for this, according to the head of one of the largest chemical concerns in the city, is not because there are more cases of rheumatism in the country today than ever before, but because sodium salicylate is made from carbolic acid heretofore imported from Europe. Now Europe needs all her carbolic acid to use in manufacturing explosives.

Horace Graves of the Oil, Drug and Paint Reporter said: "Nearly all the highly developed coal tar derivatives in the United States have been used up. Picric acid, which is used in explosives, costs $11 over in Europe to what it would cost to manufacture here. In England they are too busy to manufacture it, so they have been buying from us in great quantities. We have been selling at huge prices. Last year at this time carbolic acid cost seven cents a pound, now it has gone up to $1.50."

Gunmakers to the Kaiser.

Ordinarily the Krups manufacture railway equipment, motor cars and other steel products for purposes of peace, as well as guns. Now, however, the entire establishment is being devoted exclusively to the making of guns and war munitions. The immense furnaces are boiling tons of white-hot metal, and the stacks belching forth volumes of black smoke as the great army of gunmakers work in day and night shifts under tremendous war pressure. Busy Berthas are being prolifically produced. Guns for naval and coast defense, for siege and fortress purposes, field and mountain guns, antiaircraft guns, guns of all kinds and calibers, with accessories and appointments, such as armored turrets, shields, observation stations, conning towers, armored casements, disappearing carriages, hoisting and lifting apparatus for ammunition; great shells, torpedoes, shrapnel, case shot, all kinds of ammunition, armor plate and ordnance wagons, in fact, all the dread implements in the arsenal of war stream forth in steady shipments.—Review of Reviews.

Doubtful About It.

Nath Taylor could neither read nor write, but he put one over on the city preacher that he engaged to marry him. Nath had for a long time contemplated marrying, but never had the nerve to inquire into the necessary legal formalities. A preacher from the city happened to be visiting on the farm where Nath was employed. When Nath learned of the presence of the preacher in the house he decided to go up and inquire just what had to be done. When Nath reached the front steps his courage left him, and there Mr. Smith, his employer, found him. Nath explained his mission and the preacher was called to enlighten him.

"And so you wish to get married, my man?" the preacher nodded encouragingly to Nath, whose courage was fast slipping away.

"W-e-l-l, I think I will try it a while," Nath replied. "How much does it cost?"

SOME OF THE OLD "TIPPLES"

Early Housekeepers Had Many Recipes That Have Been Handed Down to posterity.

Whether there will be a revival during the next few years of the domestic art of making wine is a matter of pure conjecture, but it is interesting to recall that formerly many common things that grow around us were utilized by thrifty housewives in the preparation of "tipples" that were more or less mild or more or less potent. Generally the wine-making potentialities of these things are little thought of now, and in most homes, even in country homes, wine-making processes have been forgotten.

Reference has recently been made to the making of dandelion wine, a sweet and potent wine prepared with the aid of the golden flowers of the dandelion. Elderberry wine and elderflower wine were made in most of the rural homes in the Potomac country a generation or so ago. Blackberries were gathered industriously by the children for conversion into jam and wine or cordial, and raspberries were especially sought after that wine could be made from them. It is probable that in the minds of elderly persons today there is preserved a better memory of raspberry vinegar than of raspberry wine, for it was popularly believed that raspberry vinegar was superior to that made from apples.

In cherry time the fruit was treasured because it could be preserved or converted into familiar tipple called "cherry bounce," a drink which at certain stages of its "aging" or development was exhilarating and intoxicating.

The flavor of gooseberry wine was known and esteemed by most of the grandmothers and grandfathers of present Washingtonians.

On all the old farms there was a little distillery, though on some farms it was not so little, just as there was an icehouse and a smokehouse, where the peaches and apples and grapes could be distilled into fruit brandy.

Cider-making was a ceremony, and in the late fall when frost had pinched and somewhat shriveled the persimmons a strange potion called persimmon beer was made.

Parsnip wine was made by British housewives before emigration to America set in, and the art of making this wine was brought over by the early immigrants. There was also in colonial times in America a drink which was called peppermint wine, or peppermint liqueur.

LETTUCE FOR THE TABLE

Much Depends on Its Proper Preparation and Arrangement When It Is Served.

When lettuce comes from the market, clean in cold water and look it over carefully to see that all dirt and insects are removed. Place on a piece of dampened cheesecloth, then roll up and put on the ice, when it will be ready for use and will often stay fresh for a week. Some persons complain of sleepiness after eating lettuce. This is due to the lactuca in lettuce, which the milky juice contains. This juice may be removed by cutting from the lettuce the lower end of the heads or stalks and then standing the lettuce in cold water for several hours before using. Keep the head intact when you wish to quiet the nerves or to induce sleep.

The following is a pretty lettuce relish for luncheon or dinner and may be served in a small cut glass dish: Line the dish with lettuce leaves upon which place either ripe or green olives and tiny red tomatoes. Chili with cracked ice. The olives and tomatoes may be taken with the fingers at any time during the meal.

Hot-Water Platter.

Those who have to solve the problem of cold dining rooms, especially at breakfast time, will find greater comfort in the use of the hot-water platter. Boiling water is turned into the tank under the platter and the top screwed on. Then the nickel cover is placed over the food, which keeps hot and in perfect order for at least thirty minutes. The original outfit seems a little large, as the medium-sized outfit costs about nine dollars, but with careful use it will repay one in the comfort of hot meals. There is also the round hot-water plate which is excellent for the breakfast tray or invalid's use.

Egg Patties.

Beat eggs lightly and add crushed cracker crumbs till it forms a thick paste, then thin with a little milk. Season with finely cut onion, pepper and salt. Fry in butter, like pancakes. Very good and something different.

Excellent Dust Cloth.

Split and sew together the upper halves of fine cotton hose. Place these dust cloths in an airtight pall with a few drops of kerosene sprinkled on them and leave to stand 24 hours. This makes an inexpensive dustless duster.

When Making Starch.

It is a good plan, when making starch, to shave off some fine pieces of soap and add them to the starch. This gives a beautiful glossy finish to collars and cuffs, and will prevent the iron sticking.

When Dinner Is Late.

If you want the contents of a saucepan to cook quickly, never leave a spoon in it. The spoon carries off great deal of the heat and delays the boiling.

SYNOPSIS.

Captain Abraham Rose and Angelina, his wife, have lost their little home through Abe's unlucky purchase of a Gold mining stock. Their household goods sold, the $100 auction money, all they have left, will place Abe in the Old Ladies' home, or "the Old Ladies' home." Both are self-sacrificing but Abe decides: "My dear this is the fust time I've had a chance to take the wust of it." The old couple bid good-by to the little house. Terror of "what folks will say" drives them from their home, the gals of the Old Ladies' home. Miss Abigail, matron of the Old Ladies' home, hears of the ill fortune of the old couple. She tells the other old ladies, and Abe, who has been given a room in the old ladies' chamber, voices the unanimous verdict that Abe must be taken in with his wife. Abe awakens next morning to find that he is "Old Lady No. 1." The old ladies give him such a warm welcome that he is made to feel at home at once.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

But what was this? Blossey, leading all the others in a resounding call of "Welcome!" and then Blossey drawing her two hands from behind her back. One held a huge blue cup, the other the saucer to match. She placed the cup in the saucer and held it out to Abraham. He trudged down the few steps to receive it, unashamed now of the tears that coursed down his cheeks. With a burst of delight he perceived that it was a mustache cup, such as the one he had always used at home until it had been set for safe-keeping on the top pantry shelf to await the auction, where it had brought the price of eleven cents with half a paper of tacks thrown in.

And now as the tears cleared away he saw, also, what Angy's eyes had already noted, the inscription in warm crimson letters on the shining blue side of the cup, "To Our Beloved Brother."

"Sisters," he mumbled, for he could do no more than murmur, "I took his gift, 'of yew'd been gittin' ready for me six months, yew couldn't have done no better."

CHAPTER V.

The Head of the Corner.

Everybody wore their company manners to the breakfast table—the first time in the whole history of the home when company manners had graced the initial meal of the day. Being pleasant at supper was easy enough, Aunt Nancy used to say, for every one save the unreasonably cantankerous, and being agreeable at dinner was not especially difficult; but no one short of a saint could be expected to smile of mornings until sufficient time had been given to discover whether one had stepped out on the wrong or the right side of the bed.

This morning, however, no time was needed to demonstrate that everybody in the place had gotten out on the happy side of his couch. Even the deaf-and-dumb gardener had untwisted his surly temper, and as Abraham entered the dining-room, looked in at the east window with a conciliatory grin and nod which said plainly as words:

"This is a welcome sight indeed to see one of my own kind around this establishment!"

"Why don't he come in?" questioned Abe, waving back a greeting as well as he could with the treasured cup in one of his hands and the saucer in the other; whereupon Sarah Jane, that ugly duckling, explained that the fellow, being a confirmed woman hater, cooked all his own meals in the smoke house, and insisted upon all his orders being left on a slate outside the tool-house door. Abe sniffed disdainfully, contemplating her homely countenance, over which this morning's mood had cast a not unlively transfiguring glow.

"Why, the scalawag!" He frowned so at the face in the window that it immediately disappeared. "Yew don't mean ter tell me he's set ag'in yew gals? He must be crazy! Such a handsome, clever set o' women I never did see!"

Sarah Jane blushed to the roots of her thin, straight hair and sat down, suddenly disarmed of every porcupine quill that she had hidden under her wings; while there was an agreeable little stir among the sisters.

"Set down, all hands! Set down!" enjoined Miss Abigail, fluttering about with the heaviness of a fat goose. "Brother Abe—that's what we've all agreed to call yew, by unanimous vote—yew set right here at the foot of the table. Aunt Nancy always had the head an' me the foot; but I only kept the foot, partly becauz that wa'n't no man fer the place, and partly becauz I wan't no sizeable ter squeeze in anywhere else. Seein' as Sister Angy is such a little mite, though, I guess she kin easy make room fer me 'tother side o' her."

Abe could only bow his thanks as he put his gift down on the table and took the prominent place assigned to him. The others seated, there was a solemn moment of waiting with bowed heads. Aunt Nancy's trembling voice arose—the voice which had jealously guarded the right of saying grace at table in the Old Ladies' home for twenty years—not, however, in the customary words of thanksgiving, but in a peremptory "Brother Abe!"

Abram looked up. Could she possibly mean that he was to establish himself as the head of the household by repeating grace? "Brother Abe!" she called upon him again. "Yew've ask a blessing for one woman for many a year; supposin' yew ask it for thirty!"

Amid the amazement of the other sisters, Abe mumbled, and muttered, and murmured—no one knew what words; but all understood the overwhelming gratitude behind his incoherence, and all joined heartily in the Amen. Then, while Mrs. Homan, the cook of the week, went bustling out into the kitchen, Aunt Nancy felt that it devolved upon her to explain her action. It would never do, she thought, for her to gain a reputation for self-effacement and sweetness of disposition at her time of life.

"Son, I want yew to understand one thing now at the start. Yew treat us right, an' we'll treat you right. That's all we ask o' yew. Miss Ellie, pass the radishes."

"I'll do my best," Abe hastened to assure her. "Hy-guy, that coffee smells some kind o' good, don't it? Between the smell o' the stuff an' the looks o' my cup, it'll be so temptin' that I'll wish I had the neck of a gi-raffe, an' could taste it all the way down. Angy, I be afraid we'll git the gut a-livin' so high. Look at this here cream!"

Smiling, joking, his lips insisting upon joking to cover the natural feeling of embarrassment incident to this first meal among the sisters, but with his voice breaking now and again with emotion, while from time to time he had to steal his handkerchief to his old eyes, Abe passed successfully through the—to him—elaborate breakfast.

Angy sat in rapt silence, but with her face shining so that her quiet was the stillness of eloquence. Once Abe started them all by rising stealthily from the table and seizing the morning's newspaper, which lay upon the buffet.

"I knowed it!" caviled Lazy Daisy sotto voce to no one in particular. "He couldn't wait for the news till he was through eatin'!" But Abe had folded the paper into a stout weapon, and, creeping toward the window, despatched with a quick, adroit movement a fly which had alighted upon the screen.

"I hate the very sight o' them air pesky critters," he explained half apologetically. "Thar, thar, that's another one," and slaughtered that.

"My, but yew kin get 'em, can't yew?" spoke Miss Abigail admiringly.

"Them tew be the very ones I tried to catch all day yester'day; I kin see as a fly-katcher yew is a goin' ter be with a farm ter me. Set down an' try some o' this here strawberry preserve."

But Abe protested that he could not eat another bite unless he should get up and run around the house to "joggle down" what he had already swallowed. He leaned back in his chair and surveyed the room: on his right, generous-hearted Blossey, who had been smiling approval and encouragement at him all through the repast; at his left, and just beyond Angy, Miss Abigail indulging in what remained on the dishes now that she discovered the others to have finished; Aunt Nancy keenly watching him from the head of the board; and all the other sisters "betwixt an' between."

He caught Mrs. Homan's eye where she stood in the doorway leading into the kitchen, and remarked pleasantly:

"Ma'am, yewoughter set up a pancake shop in York. Yew could make a fortune at it. I hadn't had such a meal o' vittles sence I turned fifty year o' age."

A flattered smile overspread Mrs. Homan's visage, and the other sisters, noting it, wondered how long it would be before she showed her claws in Abraham's presence.

"Hy-guy, Angy," Abe went on, "yew can't believe nothin' yew hear, kin yer? Why, folks have told me that yew ladies—What yew hittin' my foot fer, mother? Folks have told me," a twinkle of amusement in his eye at the absurdity, "that yew fight among yourselves like cats an' dogs, when, law! I never see such a clever lot o' women gathered together in all my life. An' I believe—mother, I hain't a-sayin' nothin'! I jest want ter let 'em know what I think on 'em. I believe that ther must be three hundred hearts in this here place 'stid o' thirty. But dew yew know, gals, folks outside even go so fur's ter say that yew throw plates at one another!"

There was a moment's silence; then a little gasp first from one and then from another of the group. Every one looked at Mrs. Homan, and from Mrs. Homan to Sarah Jane. Mrs. Homan tightened her grip on the pancake turner; Sarah Jane uneasily moved her long fingers within reach of a sturdy little red-and-white pepper pot. Another moment passed, in which the air seemed filled with the promise of an electric storm. Then Blossey spoke hurriedly—Blossey, the tactician—clasping her hands together and bringing Abe's attention to herself.

"Really? You surprise me! You don't mean to say folks talk about us like that!"

"Slander is a dreifull long-legged critter," amended Miss Abigail, smilng and sighing in the same breath.

"Sary Jane," inquired Mrs. Homan sweetly, "what's the matter with that pepper pot? Does it need fillin'?"

And so began the reign of peace in the Old Ladies' home.

CHAPTER VI.

Indian Summer.

Miss Abigail had not banked in vain on the "foresightedness of the Lord." At the end of six months, instead of there being a shortage in her accounts because of Abe's presence, she was able to show the directors such a balance sheet as excelled all her previous commendable records.

"How do you explain it?" they asked her.

"We cast our bread on the waters," she answered, "an' Providence jes' kept a-sentin' out the loaves." Again she said. "Twas grinnin' that done it. Brother Abe kept the garden good-natured, an' the gardeners he jest grinnin' at the garden sass until it was ashamed not ter flourish; an' Brother Abe kept the gals good-natured an' they wa'n't so nisy about what they eat; an' he kept the visitors a-slaughin' jest ter see him here, an' when yew make folks laugh they want ter turn around an' dew somethin' fer yew. I tell yew, yew kin only keep grittorn'er ter grin, yew kin drive away a drought."

In truth, there had been no drought in the garden that summer, but almost a double yield of corn and beans; no drought in the gifts sent to the home, but showers of plenty. Some of these came in the form of fresh fish and game left at the back door; some delicious fruits; some in barrels of clothing. And the barrels of clothing solved another problem; for no longer did their contents consist solely of articles of feminine attire. "Bliss shirts" poured out of them; socks and breeches

SUCCESSFUL RUSE OF WOMAN

Mrs. Gadspur Got Benefit of Way News by Telling Husband of Love Letters on Back Page.

"Any war news in the paper today?" asked Mrs. Gadspur of Mr. Gadspur, who was deeply absorbed in the morning "Banner."

"Um," was Mr. Gadspur's only reply.

"I saw yesterday where the Turks had lost a large number of men in the bombardment of the Dardanelles."

No response.

"And the allies won a victory over the Germans."

Mr. Gadspur took a swallow of coffee and again disappeared behind the paper.

"I see on the back page," continued Mrs. Gadspur, leaning over the table as if to scan the headlines better, "that the love letters of a beautiful divorcee were read in court."

"Umph! There's nothing new about the war," said Mr. Gadspur, quickly reversing the paper. While he was searching for the love letters of a mythical divorcee Mrs. Gadspur glanced at the front page, which was now turned toward her, and learned from letters a foot high that one of the greatest battles of the war had just been fought.

Juvenile Logic.
"Mamma," said small Edgar after glancing over his Sunday school lesson, "I don't believe Solomon was half as rich as they say he was."

"Why not, dear?" queried his mother.

"Cause," replied the youthful student, "it says here, 'And he slept with his fathers.' If he had been so very rich I guess he would have had a bed of his own."

How it Ended.
Uncle John—Are you still quarreling with your neighbor because his cat dined on your canary?

His Niece—No, indeed; that's all over long ago.

Uncle John—Well, I'm glad to hear you have buried the hatchet.

His Niece—But I didn't bury the hatchet, Uncle John; I buried his cat.

A BAD BLOW.

"Yaa, my trip to Europe was completely spoiled at the very last, don't you know?"

"How was that?"

"One of the labels came off my suitcase and got lost."

Proof Positive.
"Do you drink coffee?" asked the doctor of an aged patient.

"I do," replied the other.

"Don't you know," continued the wise M. D., "that coffee is a slow poison?"

"Yes, very slow," answered the old man, "I have taken it daily for nearly eighty-seven years."

One Can Sometimes Tell.
Fond Mother—My dear, I don't believe that young man who called on you last evening is much of a society man.

Pretty Daughter—But he seems to be very intelligent.

Fond Mother—Yes; that's the trouble.

Literally So.
She—Are the Howlers very high minded people?

He—High toned? I should say they are. When they quarrel you can hear them two blocks away.

Aids to Oratory.

Demosthenes put pebbles in his mouth to improve his oratory."

"Well, he had to use the facilities that were available. Cough lozenges hadn't been invented then."

DID NOT FEAR FOR KINNAIRD

If He Came Home With Broken Leg It Would Be Somebody Else's, Said Friend to His Wife.

Lord Kinnaird, who has always been noted for his many charitable enterprises, is now actively interesting himself in a fund to provide comforts for members of the Royal Naval Air Service and the Royal Flying Corps.

In his younger days Lord Kinnaird was an enthusiastic amateur footballer. He had the reputation of being a very spirited player, apropos of which fact an amusing story is told.

One day Lady Kinnaird was telling a friend that she feared her husband would meet with an accident while playing his favorite game.

"I am certain," she said, anxiously, "that he will come home one day with a broken leg."

"That may be," answered her friend with a smile; "but you may be certain that it will be somebody else's leg!"

An Irishman was out gunning for ducks with a friend, who noticed that although Mike aimed his gun several times he did not shoot it off. At last he said: "Mike, why didn't you shoot that time? The whole flock was right in front of you!"

"Oh know," said Mike, "but every time I aimed me gun at a duck another wan come right between us."

Belle—it looks like love at first sight with him.

Beulah—Oh, he loved her before he saw her.

"Impossible."

"No, it's not. He had read about her."

"Where, for goodness' sakes?"

"In Bradstreet's."

"Of course," said the surgeon who had operated for appendicitis, "there will be a scar."

"That's all right," replied the patient.

HENDRICK'S PLACE

He Held It Only Long Enough to Make Sure of a Better.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.
(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspapers Syndicate.)

Evelyn Post acknowledged the respectful greeting of the tall, straight young man in the doorway. Hendrick did not look the part of chauffeur—not exactly; he was altogether too handsome, too self-possessed, with an air of authority that did not rest well on a servant. But his skill in driving compensated for these other faults.

He had remained in the employ of Evelyn's mother for three months and all during that time he had kept his place.

But Evelyn did not like him—she was positive of that; because he looked disconcertingly like men of her own class. It was puzzling and not at all desirable in a maid.

There even were times when she found herself addressing him on terms of equality. Of course, she always followed such a lapse by unusual haughtiness.

Altogether the advice of Hendrick was rather disquieting to his young mistress.

Now he stood, quietly attentive, waiting for his morning orders.

"Get the morning mail, Hendrick," said Mrs. Post; "return and drive Miss Post over to Mill Hill."

"I beg your pardon, Mrs. Post, but the river is rising and the Mill Hill bridge is unsafe," said Hendrick.

"Then go around the other way—the long road," returned Mrs. Post.

Hendrick bowed and disappeared.

At eleven o'clock Hendrick returned with the car and announced that the long bridge was down in the flood and that the upper bridge could not long hold up against the waters pouring from the swollen creeks which were tributary to the river.

Evelyn paused with one foot on the step of the car.

"I'm sure it cannot be so bad," she said carelessly. "You will drive over, Hendrick; Mrs. Beatty's pleasure."

Hendrick hesitated, almost as if he were going to demur; then he shrugged his shapely shoulders, climbed to his seat and started the car.

Evelyn found herself studying her chauffeur's stern, clear-cut profile. How becoming was the neat tan livery!

Hendrick was so dark—she bit her lip and stamped her foot on the rug.

She would tell her mother to discharge Hendrick in the morning. He was presumptuous!

"Presumptuous? In what way?"

asked her conscience.

Evelyn Post knew that the chauffeur's presumption lay in the fact that he stimulated her interest—nothing beyond that!

At the foot of the slope that led to the bridge, Hendrick stopped the car and turned to Evelyn.

"Do you still wish to cross the river, Miss Post?" he asked.

Evelyn glanced indifferently at the bridge in the distance. "Certainly—drive on Hendrick."

"The bridge isn't safe, Miss Post," objected Hendrick with a note of sternness in his voice.

"So you said before," returned Evelyn coldly. "Please drive on. I promised Mrs. Beatty I would be there at twelve o'clock, and it is now half past the hour."

The car glided down the hill until the front tires touched the timbers of the bridge. Evelyn glanced at the river boiling between its narrow banks. She could see that it was rising rapidly, and the wooden planks of the bridge were wet where the waters had splashed up between them. The frail structure trembled at the first impact of the heavy car.

Hendrick got down and came to the tonneau, one gauntleted hand resting on the door.

"It is unsafe to take the car across the bridge, Miss Post," said the chauffeur patiently; "it is more than unsafe—it is foolhardy. If you will walk across, I will try and take the car over and then pick you up on the other side." He opened the door.

"If you are afraid, Hendrick, I will drive the car myself," said Evelyn, with wonderful self-control. Hendrick would be discharged the instant they reached home—she would see about that.

"If you are afraid, Hendrick..."

Evelyn was repeating when the chauffeur leaned forward, deftly snatched her from the seat and ran across the bridge, holding her in his strong arms as if she had been a baby. She could feel his heart pounding beneath her hand. He hated him!

The bridge swayed a little under their united weight. They reached the other side and Hendrick dropped his burden and ran back to the car. He leaped to his seat and started the machine across the bridge.

Evelyn, hating him with all her heart, saw the bridge quiver under the weight of the big car. She longed to cry out and send him back, but pride stilled the words on her lips.

The structure sagged when the car reached the middle. There was a rending crash of timbers, and then a horrible thud from the river beneath. She saw the water boiling up through the jagged remains of the old bridge. The car and its driver had disappeared.

"...if mad with terror and remorse, the girl ran to the edge of the bank and looked for Hendrick. The car was visible, half balanced on the big stones beneath the bridge. But the broken timbers of the bridge were heaped over it so that she could see no signs of the plucky chauffeur who had dared death to carry out her foolish orders.

She tossed aside her veil and hat, crawling out on the jutting end of a girder, she looked down at the fallen motor car.

"Hendrick!" she called, and her voice broke into sobs.

She fancied that some of the planks around the car moved; then a gloved hand was visible, then a shoulder, and at last Hendrick's pale face looking up at her from the heaped debris.

"Go back!" he ordered hoarsely.

For answer Evelyn leaned over the abyss of boiling foam and stretched out a hand. "Let me help you—what can I do?" she called.

"Go back!" he repeated. "I am all right."

"You can do nothing alone," she protested. "Keep perfectly quiet and I will go for help—please, please keep still and let me do something for you."

"Very well," he agreed shortly.

"Only make haste and get off that broken girder—go back cautiously, fix your eyes on shore and don't lose your nerve."

With encouraging words he cheered her way back along the dangerous stringpiece—a way which she had bravely trod a short while before in the great fear that he was forever lost.

Gaining the river bank, she tossed her long cloak aside, sped up the road to the top of Mill Hill, and stumbled through the gate just as Mrs. Beatty came down the drive in her smart runabout.

There were hurried exclamations and questions, which Evelyn answered with what calmness she could muster. Then Alice Beatty issued a few orders and in ten minutes several men were racing down the long hill to the broken bridge. Mrs. Beatty and Evelyn followed in the runabout.

When they reached the bridge it was to find the flood tearing at the splintered boards which had imprisoned Hendrick in the fallen motor car. The Beatty servants were quick-witted and trained to meet emergencies. Two of them tossed down a noosed rope to the chauffeur, who slipped it under his arms. Then, by main force they pulled.

When Hendrick reached the river bank he promptly lost consciousness. Bigley, the gardener, made a hasty examination and spoke to his mistress.

"He's hurt his head, I think, ma'am. We better be taking him up to the house in the car."

Evelyn turned her head that she might not see Hendrick's still, white face, stern even in its unconsciousness. Mrs. Beatty leaned forward eagerly, pressed back the heavy locks of brown hair and screamed:

"Why it's Teddy! Evelyn, I thought you said it was your new chauffeur!"

"Why it is—Hendrick—he has only been with us a few months, if it isn't Hendrick—who is it, Alice?"

"My cousin, Teddy Hendrickson," sobbed Mrs. Beatty, holding Hendrick's strong hand in both of hers.

"He speculated and lost every penny he had. Father offered to help him get back on his feet again, but he refused—said he'd find some way out all by himself—he's the pluckiest boy alive!" Then Teddy disappeared and father had been looking for him high and low ever since."

Evelyn was crying bitterly as they walked back up the hill.

It was several hours afterward, when the late chauffeur was lying with bandaged head in the best bedroom of the Beatty home, that Evelyn was admitted to see him. Mrs. Beatty had personally borne her cousin's request to see Miss Post.

The room was bathed in the late afternoon sunlight. Teddy Hendrickson was lying with his dark eyes fixed on the door. A glad look came into his face when Evelyn entered.

For a long while they looked at each other. Then the girl's glance wavered and fell beneath his ardent glance.

"I'm sorry—I cannot tell you how sorry I am to have been the cause of your injuries. It was all my silly wilfulness, and I hope you will forgive me."

"Forgive—you?" he breathed quickly. "You must have known it was a privilege to serve you."

"And I am sorry—sorry that I said—that I said you did not know your place—I didn't understand that was your better judgment and your courage in rising above your situation that prompted your defiance of my orders."

She held out her hand timidly and Hendrickson covered it in a warm clasp. His dark eyes looked into her blue ones with a strange significance.

"I know the place I want to fill, Miss Post," he said quietly, "and some day I will gain it."

Italy and Civilization.

The history of Italy is, with the exception of Greece, the most illustrious in the world. In art, especially painting and sculpture, Italy stands pre-eminent. In literature her place is, to say the least, in the front rank. In science, she has borne a conspicuous position, and in music her place is easily second. If not first in fine, Italy's story is more brilliant than that of any other country except Greece, and to Greece she is a very close second.

A Triumph Lacking.

The teacher had told the story of David and Goliath.

"There wasn't any baseball in those days," said the thoughtful boy.

"No."

The Miami Silver Belt says: "The Labor Day speech of Governor G. W. P. Hunt at Miami contained at least one good idea; an idea which has evolved in France since the outbreak of the great European war. It is to the effect that when a citizen is injured to an extent where he is incapacitated for duty in one line of human endeavor that when so desired the state can take the citizen in charge and educate him for some other line of human endeavor so that he will not become a burden to himself, his family and society at large. Which is so simple a proposition that it ought not to have been necessary for the casualties incident to a great war to be required to make the world see the point. In fact, the wonder is, not that this idea is being adopted, but that it was not adopted in the long, long ago.
