WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

POOR BRAKES AND A SMOOTH ROAD

Scores of accidents are caused by defective or worn out brakes. Even a speed of 20 miles an hour is dangerous if it requires 50 feet to bring you to a stop. Watch your brakes. Tests of 175 cars for brake performance concluded by engineers of the Bureau of Standards at Washington, D. C., show that automobile brakes in active service are not up to the standard set by engineers. Emergency or hand-brakes, chief reliance of many motorists, especially those equipped with modern four-wheel brakes, when a sudden stop is required failed to come up to specifications by a wide margin. Foot, or service brakes were better, but not sufficiently good to insure a great margin of safety. Seventeen per cent of the foot brakes were marked excellent.

Only three per cent of the emergency brakes were marked excellent. Sixteen per cent were good and 87 per cent poor. In the tests the driver was required to drive his car 20 miles an hour on a smooth, well-traveled asphalt highway and then come to a sudden stop. TRAFFIC COUNT IN NEW YORK. A recent traffic count in New York showed that 195,680 vehicles—only 8 per cent horse drawn—ruter and leave Manhattan Island between 7 a. m. and 7 p. m. Mechanical counters were used by 200 students of the School of Technology of City College of New York at 24 points. Such counts reveal the points of traffic where relief must first be obtained. Usually the same points show the highest percentage of accidents. New York when planned as a city of small buildings. Today it is a city of skyscrapers. And yet the same streets must take care of the increased population. Many streets have been extended; more are to be. The sidewalks in most cities are much too wide for the pedestrian traffic they are asked to accommodate. Sidewalks can be made narrower and in that way streets made wider.

FARM FLOCK SUGGESTIONS

By L. C. Boggs, Extension Poultryman.

Feeding for Winter Egg Production

Now that the weather has become colder, poultrymen should pay particular attention to the condition of his birds to make sure that they do not become too thin in flesh to continue laying heavily through the winter. Early pullets, especially, if fed equal parts of any standard egg mash and scratch by weight have a tendency to lay so heavily during the fall that they deplete their body of any excess fat so that when cold weather comes on they are not prepared to lay heavily and maintain the proper body temperature. As a consequence they stop laying.

Much better results are obtained in the winter by increasing the consumption of scratch. With the present price of corn below that of wheat, it is also a good plan to increase the amount of corn in the scratch. By furnishing the hens with warm water to drink on cold mornings, enough extra eggs will be obtained to pay for the trouble. In some sections of the country where the winters are more severe than they are in Arizona, the poultrymen use electric light globes under the water pans to keep the water from freezing, for cold water retards digestion.

Electric Lights

Many experiments have been conducted proving the fact that it is profitable to use artificial lights on hens or pullets for winter egg production.

There are several times of the day to use the lights. The method that is most convenient for the average poultryman is to have them turned on about 4 a. m. The lights can be arranged to be turned on by having the switch operated by an alarm clock. By throwing some scratch in the litter before going to bed the birds will have something to do when they get up in the morning and the poultryman will not have to "rise with the chickens." Artificial lights should not be used on hens that are to be used for breeders this spring unless they are used only during the breeding season.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

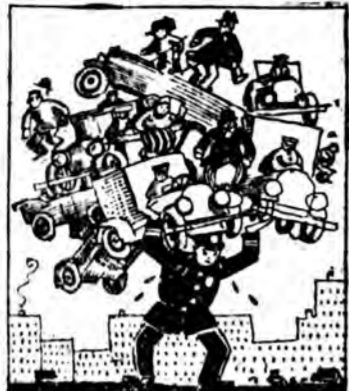

EVERY CITY SHOULD HAVE A PLANNING COMMISSION

The day has passed when the entire burden for the responsibility of a city's traffic conditions can be placed upon a municipality's police department.

All praise to the police of America. In working out practical means to relieve traffic congestion they have done marvelously well. Imagine what New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, New Orleans, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Kansas City and our other great cities would be like without police traffic control. Chaos would be the result.

But while one-way streets, synchronized control, elimination of left-hand turns, full-stop streets and the other hundred and one regulations which have been devised by the police have been remarkably effective in bettering traffic conditions, it is not enough. The time is here for American cities to take stock of themselves. To be specific: Our American cities were designed in the days of horse-drawn vehicles and slowly moving horse-drawn street cars.

But this is the age of motor cars.

The automobile is today the principal and accepted means of transportation of the American people.

There was a time when this statement could be disputed. But it can't be today.

It is possible to load half of the population of the United States in the registered motor vehicles of the country.

But 8,000,000 of the nation's population could be piled into all the existing railroad day coaches and sleeping cars of the country.

The city of today must be adapted to meet this new means of transportation.

Every city should have a city planning commission made up of men with imagination and vision.

The city without such a commission is lagging behind. Chambers of commerce, boards of trade, merchants' associations and the like, should co-operate in seeing to it that city planning commissions are organized and put to work.

And they must work out a plan for the immediate relief of the city, for improvement ten years from now and 25 years from now.

ridges, with a space of 35 centimeters (14 inches) between for two rows of onions, 22 centimeters (9 ins.) apart with the plants 12 centimeters (4 1/2 ins.) apart in the rows. Two days before planting there is applied to the field a fertilizer composed of sulphate of ammonia, 45 parts, superphosphate of lime, 40 parts, and chloride of potash 15 parts—about 400 pounds to the acre. This quantity would represent the average, other soils will require 50 per cent more, especially if full rot of has not been practiced. The use of organic manures is to be avoided, because they induce that disease unless very well rotted and plowed under some time before planting. Another formula for chemical fertilizer used is: Sulphate of iron, 7 per cent; chloride of potash, 7 per cent; superphosphate of lime, 55 per cent; sulphate of ammonia, 35 per cent.

On the day of transplanting the field is irrigated so that the soil may have sufficient moisture to make the operation possible. Another irrigation is given a little later in order to get the plants well established and started on their growth. After this, irrigation is used sparingly as possible, to induce the plants to make roots, since this promotes the development of the bulb. Shallow cultivation, keeping the soil well pulverized and scrupulously clean of weeds, require constant labor until the harvest. The last irrigation is given about three weeks before the harvest.

Most of the work, except plowing, is done by hand, the small fields preclude the use of any but small cultivators and hoes, and weeding by hand.

Where there is no scarcity of water for irrigation purposes, the plants are not set on ridges, as described above, but on flat surfaces. In this case the field is laid out in strips about three yards in width, separated by low ridges to contain the water. The whole strip is put under water, instead of filling the furrows only, as in the other method. The "flat" method is preferable because it facilitates cultivation. When this method is employed, fertilizers can be applied after the plants have become well established, by broadcasting the material over the field and letting the water immediately after.

In the latter part of July or the first week in August the grano onion is ready for harvesting. The habosa is ready in May. Several days before the onions are pulled up, the tops are leveled down to admit the sun to the bulbs and check the flow of sap into the tops.

When the onions are pulled the tops are cut off and the bulbs are laid out in the field to dry, then thoroughly cleaned of all soil and organic matter. They are then ready to be packed and shipped, or to be stored in the bins mentioned above, until the farmer wants to sell. The habosa must be shipped at once, while the grano will keep until March, unless defective or affected with disease.

The onion is subject to a few diseases or attacks on the part of insect pests. When the summers are exceptionally damp, fungi and blight attack the plants, which are difficult to combat, because the smoothness of the foliage prevents the adherence of fungicides. An insect called the "stara cricket" sometimes does damage.

Scandal-mongers have no union rules and never object to working overtime.
