ROADS ARE NATIONAL PROBLEM

When a man is sick he calls the doctor. He has faith in the doctor as long as the doctor makes him better. But when he finds that the physician has diagnosed the case incorrectly or is using a treatment which does not bring back health he either changes doctors or asks for a consultation.

Sick for good roads, the American people called in a doctor (Congress) and received a "first-aid" treatment, called Federal aid, by which the physician ordered from the pharmacy (the Public Treasury) sufficient dollars to help the various parts of the United States to build new arteries.

But the United States needs not a few but a very large number of new arteries, and the prescription of the doctor isn't producing them in time to save the economic life of the patient!

Is it, therefore, not the part of wisdom to ask for a consultation, and have the doctor confer with other physicians with another and a newer vision of the illness of poor roads and the method of their cure?

One of the cures advocated, and the only one which hasn't been tried, is the appointment of a National Highways Commission, to consider and report to the Congress on the subject of establishing, building, and forever maintaining a system of national highways.

States which tried State aid and found it did not cure have tried State highway commissions and found they did cure; why should not the United States find as a whole the same good result the several States have found for themselves?

Roads are a national, not a State, problem. Transportation is a national, not a State, problem. Only the Nation can adequately and intelligibly lay out a system of roads for the Nation, and only the Nation can afford to build and maintain such highways as will adequately care for the present, not to speak of the future, traffic!

Americans Flood Rome for Holy Year

Rome will be the goal of pilgrims and tourists during the coming Holy Year (December 24, 1924 to December 24, 1925). Above are shown the Holy places of pilgrimage in the Eternal City: (Upper left) The Church of St. Maria Maggiore, (Lower left) Altar of St. Paul's, (Right) The Great Altar of St. Peter's, 95 feet high. The Churches of The Jubilee are St. Peter's, St. Paul's, St. Maria Maggiore and St. John in Laterano.

Indications are that all records of tourist travel from the United States to Rome and other cities in Italy will be broken next year. The occasion is the celebration, where skies are brightest, of the Holy Year of Jubilee, a quarto-centennial. To non-Catholic tourists the year is advantageous as it gives the traveler an opportunity to see old Rome, Venice, Florence, Naples, and other beautiful cities in gala array and in all the pomp of one of the most gladsome and yet solemn celebrations in the old world. The celebration is also attractive to non-Catholics because it gives a most unusual opportunity to study the customs of one of the most emotional and interesting of peoples.

To the Catholic the event is a matter of joyous, yet solemn and pious concern. It is then that hundreds of thousands of Catholics from all parts of the world make pilgrimage to the ancient shrines of the Roman Catholic faith and engage in special and holy observances that special indulgences may be gained. While the Holy Year extends officially from Christmas to Christmas, the pilgrimage of the Catholics reaches its height in midsummer. An official of the Italian Line (the N. G. I.), commenting on the situation, said: "We are being flooded with requests for reservations by pilgrims and tourists to Italy for the Jubilee. The majority wish to travel on one of our largest ships, the Duilio, the Giulio Cesare or the Colombo. We have to advise them that the only way to ensure reservations is to book early."

The Holy Year, solemnized every 25 years by the Roman Catholic Church, was instituted by Pope Boniface VIII, on April 22, 1300. The Pope prescribed that the Holy Year should be solemnized every hundred years. Later, Pope Paul II decreed that Holy Year should be observed every 25 years. During the last Holy Year, Rome was crowded with pilgrims from every place in the Catholic world. In the past only the Basilicas of St. Peter and St. Paul were considered "Churches of the Jubilee," but later the qualification was extended to the Basilicas of St. John in Laterano and St. Maria Maggiore. The coming Holy Year will be inaugurated December 24, 1924, and will end on December 25, 1925.

Hayloader Earns $8 a Day in Action

Surprising though it may be to some farmers who haven't stopped to figure the advance in labor costs since pre-war days, but the hayloader now earns more than twice what it did ten years ago. This is based on harvest wages of two men today compared with ten years ago, the loader saving at least two men in putting up the hay. On top of that earning power of about $8 a day in the hay field, a higher quality may worth more as feed or on the market is the result. Hay must be cut at the right time, cured just enough and then put in the mow or stack with the least handling and with the least exposure to the sun. A rain simply destroys a large share of the value of any of the clovers or alfalfas. If used only 12 days, the machine expense for a hayloader is about 63 cents a day, taking the government figures for the life of the loader at 16 years.

Golf Charts Teach Strokes and Standing Positions

To check the game of experienced golfers or to teach beginners, a set of six charts, printed with directions and illustrations showing correct standing positions, grips and strokes, and other fine points, has been devised. With them, one may read a lesson in golf technique and follow it at the same time. Printed on heavy paper, the charts are to be placed on the floor. Standing over them with club in hand, the player is able to get the proper grip and position and execute the stroke in correct form. The diagrams afford a constant check and a means of comparison for accuracy in every detail.

New Theory of Radio Is Advanced

In the opinion of Carl Pfanstiel, a Chicago radio engineer, the wave theory of radio will soon be exploded completely, and the radiant-energy theory will take its place in explaining radio phenomena. Mr. Pfanstiel is of the opinion that there is no such thing as "ether" as is commonly referred to. He says that what are usually spoken of as radio waves are undoubtedly generated in a manner that is entirely artificial.

Portable Garret Step

In bungalows where limited space does not permit built-in garret steps, a "folding" stepladder of the kind shown in the drawing has been found very convenient. It is made of 1 by 5-in. lumber, the risers being set between the sides at such an angle that they are perfectly horizontal when the ladder is pulled away from the wall. Two large screws fastened to

Patching Auto Taps

When patching auto taps it is a good plan to place a board across the top lows under the covering to provide a firm surface on which to work. After the patch is applied a weight should be placed on it and left until the cement is dry, so that the patch will not curl up at the edges.

Serviceable Dandelion Hook

Occasionally the breaking off of a lobe of a hoe renders it unfit for further use and it is then usually thrown away. However, a serviceable tool for the purpose of removing dandelions can easily be made from it. The shank of the broken hoe is straightened in line with the handle and the blade is cut and filed to the shape shown, a Y-shaped notch being cut in the end and filed to a sharp edge. One of the points is cut to form a pulling hook, the throat of which is, of course, dull. A tool of this kind is very handy, as it can be used to cut the dandelions at their stems or pull them out entirely.

Can the Skin See. Is Query

The human skin has powers of vision which in a great extent have been lost through years of neglect, is the theory of a French scientist. A series of experiments conducted by him are said to support this belief. The sensitivity of the skin and underlying tissue with its intricate net of nerves is well known, but no one heretofore has supposed them to be capable of sending or light waves in a normal manner, except by the process of seeing.

HEALTH OFFICER DENIES COLE COMMITTED SUICIDE

Rumors to the effect that the late city clerk, F. E. Cole, committed suicide as a result of an alleged shortage in his accounts were scored by City Health Officer Dr. W. H. Purdy, who stated Tuesday that the deceased died from natural causes, and attributed his death directly to apoplexy.

Dr. Purdy's statement follows: "Dr. Chenoweth and I arrived at the Cole home 45 minutes before his death. We were summoned there because the deceased was found in an unconscious condition. We rendered what aid possible but realized that it was a hopeless case.

"I could find no trace of poison nor bodily injury. There were no acid burns about the mouth and no contraction of the pupils, such as caused by narcotics. Mr. Cole died from natural causes. We made a thorough examination and was with him fully 45 minutes before he expired."

It is alleged that Cole was about $5500 short in his accounts.

NUMEROUS CHANGES IN RANGE CATTLE INDUSTRY

Cattle ranching methods in the United States have changed much within the last few years, with the passing of land into private ownership and the fencing of range. It will become very intensive, says the United States Department of Agriculture, as capital accumulates, prices of beef rise, and the importance of producing enough forage and providing sufficient range to keep the cattle through the winter becomes more pressing.

Ranches, says the department, must be big enough to carry from 100 to 200 head of cattle. This means that in many cases a ranchman must have permits to run a good share of his livestock on forest ranges. It is predicted that large ranches will be divided, and that on the other hand small ranches will be consolidated into units of sufficient size for economical operation.

Ranchmen are now mainly concerned with improvement of the carrying capacity of forest ranges. It is to their interest, says the department, that the ranges, instead of being exploited, should be made more productive.

Pure Water and Fresh Air For Live Stock

The first essential to live stock farming is an ample supply of pure water. The second is the fresh supply of the right kind in sufficient amounts. Government experts now declare that the easiest way to fight disease in hogs and cattle in particular is in giving them a clean pure water and air supply throughout the year. The easiest cure with tuberculosis in swine and cattle, for example, is in starting with healthy herds and keeping them healthy by sanitary surroundings. Drinking cups on metal stalls for the dairy cows, ventilators of approved type for their barns and stalls, and litter and feed carriers that cannot be contaminated easily all help. Water piped to the various lots and barns for the hogs and available so that they will not have to drink dirty water or go without will keep hogs free from worms and resultant diseases.

DRILL COSTS 15 CENTS AN ACRE

A profit of almost 3000% for the grain drill over out-of-date methods of seeding grain is reported by the Research Department of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers. This profit is arrived at by taking the Government figures for the life of the grain drill, the price asked by your dealer, and figuring out an acre expense of 15 cents for the drill, a bushel of seed and an increase of 2 bushels of grain are used. Of course, on red clover, sweet clover and some of those fine seed crop for which the price of seed is high, the gains are much greater. The best wheat growers of all sections of the wheat exporting world use the grain drill, Canada and the U. S., using it almost exclusively. For the other crops, many of our farmers have failed to see the value of this seed saving and crop gain. The experimental stations have proved it however.

LOS ANGELES CLAIMS ARIZONA GRAND CANYON AS ITS OWN SUBURB

PHOENIX.—"What do I think about it? I think they have their nerve," was the response of Gov. G. W. P. Hunt when advised of plans under which other cities of Southern California might join with Los Angeles in securing sufficient municipal water supplies from the Colorado river.

"They only want to take the whole river," he exclaimed, "but we are not going to give them anything of the sort—not if we can help it."

A Los Angeles "Suburb" "You know," the governor continued, "while on my northern trip I heard of a party of Los Angeles people who went down into the Grand Canyon. What do you think they did? They jostled on the rocks a lot of stickers that proclaimed that the canyon was 'a suburb of Los Angeles.' That seems to be the Los Angeles attitude. Can you beat it?"

At no point in the brief interview did the governor indicate that the flow and power of the Colorado should be considered in other light than as the property of the state of Arizona.

ANDY BETTWAY OUT FOR STATE SENATORSHIP

I beg to announce my candidacy for State Senator subject to the Democratic voters of Santa Cruz County.

I have never held any political office nor am I a member of the aristocratic nor do I reside in the ultra fashionable locality of Nogales, in which locality it is common to find a few lying who assume that "holler than thou" attitude, and only during political campaigns will they stoop to mingle with the common herd.

I was not urged to enter this race by a number of people of this county, regardless of party affiliations, but was encouraged by many real Democrats who believe that they are privileged to vote in Santa Cruz County primary elections for whomsoever they may think would make the best representative for them.

I am a firm believer in Jeffersonian Democracy—justice for all, special privileges for none—and don't feel that I am making any sacrifice because I know that there are many good and capable Democrats in Santa Cruz County that could fill this position perfectly and who would gladly serve as State Senator.

I most respectfully solicit the party vote at the coming primary.

ANDREW BETTWAY.

PICTURESQUE PEASANT GARB; ORNATE WITH HANDICRAFT

AS TO a league of nations fashion does not hesitate to form alliance with any country whose art and costume contributes "ideas" to the cause of modern dress design. Chinese art and colorings, Egyptian, East Indian, Spanish, the stylist plays no favorites, drawing on each or all for inspiration. Just now there is a wave of popularity for gypsy-like colorings, expressed in bandana-like prints and native embroideries. The peasant blouse, such as forms part of the picturesque country club or afternoon frock in this illustration, is of purely middle-European origin. Its embroidery is done by the peasantry itself, these finely-worked blouses having found their way to American fashion centers in great numbers. They are accorded a prominent place among summer modes.

OF MIDDLE-EUROPE ORIGIN

There is a flavor of Spanish influence in the little bolero and the wide gracefully knotted sash. Rumor has it that the bolero is coming back into fashion and it is a fact that some of the advance fall suits show this tendency. Perhaps this is the outcome of the sleeveless vogue for the jacquette without sleeves is prominently featured this season.

pieces of gay-colored felt in grotesque shapes. By the way, the latest news from Paris confirms the vogue for the felt shape trimmed in contrasting felt. In regard to the felt chapeau shown to the left above: It is very cleverly designed, in that a half circle is cut out from each side of the crown, falling at each side over the brim, forming a sort of wing effect. Novelty silver ribbon is inset so as to fill in the open spaces at each side of the crown, with a finish of ribbon binding. A cravat of the ribbon encircles the crown and colorful wooden beads contribute their share of charm.

LITTLE FELT HAT POPULAR

midsummer costumes are those which stress white with color. The fact that the broad sash ends are bordered with the same fabric as the bolero, which, by the way, is navy plaided crepe, relates the entire into an ensemble costume.

POULTRY

SUMMER FEEDING OF HENS IS IMPORTANT

Nature will not supply enough animal protein in the form of bugs and worms during the spring and summer to supply the laying flock of poultry with what is needed to insure good egg production, says A. G. Phillips, head of the poultry department of Purdue university. In the spring when birds get onto free range and in the summer when they utilize the entire farm for exercise, it is a common practice to reduce the amount of mash containing protein and depend upon the grain as the large part of the feed to be supplied by those who keep poultry.

As the weather warms up, birds do not need as much heat supplied by the grain as they do in the winter. Consequently the grain consumption should naturally be reduced and mash consumption increased. In order to see that the birds eat more mash as the season progresses it may be necessary to feed practically no grain in the morning. If the Purdue mash of 50 pounds bran, 50 pounds middlings and 30 pounds tankage is used, the proportion of grain to mash in the spring should be two to one and in the summer one to one, or equal parts of grain to mash.

As a rule egg production begins to slump as soon as warm weather arrives, but if the mash consumption increases the slump will not be so great. The summer production can be very high and consequently very profitable. On farms where much waste grain is available it may be wise to confine the birds until about ten o'clock in the morning, thus compelling them to eat mash before they are permitted to roam over the farm. High mash consumption is absolutely necessary to insure summer egg production.

Green Feeds and Water Essential for All Hens

It is absolutely essential that layers be furnished green-feed of some kind. The question of how to supply this green feed must be decided by the individual. For maximum egg production the bird must have access to fresh clean water at all times, which should neither be too hot nor too cold. One hundred hens in good laying condition should consume from 12 to 24 quarts of water daily, and in extremely hot weather even more.

When properly fed, milk makes an excellent feed for laying hens. Skim milk or buttermilk are economical feeds and when available should be used instead of the higher-priced protein feeds such as meat scraps. Skimmed milk not only contains the valuable food nutrients, but it is in the form that is easily digested. Sour milk is preferable to sweet milk, since sweet milk when fed may not all be consumed before it sours, thus causing the fowl to have sweet food at one time, and then sour immediately following, which is not advisable. Furthermore, sour milk contains an acid that is said to be a benefit in controlling bowel troubles.

Grit in some form is very essential to the health of a flock and also means economy in feeding. It is also to be remembered that shells are just as important as any other part of the egg. A large amount of lime is used in building these shells. Unless some form of lime is supplied, hens laying heavily will not secure a sufficient amount to manufacture the shells.

Corn Gluten in Ration

Corn gluten feed makes an excellent addition to the ration, and may be procured through almost any feed store. It is highly palatable and may be fed to advantage in the dry mash with other feed, such as follows: One hundred pounds of cornmeal, 100 pounds of bran, 100 pounds of white middlings, 100 pounds of ground feed, 100 pounds of corn gluten feed, 100 pounds of meat scrap, 6 pounds of charcoal, 6 pounds of salt.

Poultry Hints

Keep a good, strong padlock on the hen-coop door.

Six roosters with each 100 hens should give good fertility and hatchability with Leghorns.

Ground where last year's chicks died isn't good ground for this year's chicks. Move the coops and brooders.

The Orpington is an English general-purpose breed that is winning quite a place in America. Orpingtons have white skin and produce brown eggs—an unusual combination.

A. A. Holberg, assistant poultryman at the Minnesota college farm, saves himself work in cleaning dropping boards by keeping them covered with a layer of fine sand. He says it keeps the boards more sanitary, too.

Feeding the chicks too soon causes diarrhea. The egg yolk enters the chick's body shortly before the chick hatches. The chick should have time to use up this yolk before it is given any other feed.

DENVER THE CENTER OF COMMERCIAL FILM INDUSTRY

Denver.—Having doubled its business in the last two years, the Alexander Film Company of Denver is probably now the leading commercial film company in the United States.

Three and a half acres of land recently purchased adjoining the studio grounds in Englewood increases the company's real estate holdings to seven and a half acres. This additional ground is to be used for expansion purposes.

The Alexander Film Company now has customers in forty-six states and holds screening rights in approximately 1,000 theaters. Present plans call for increasing the number of theaters controlled to 2,000, the additional 1,000 being needed to take care adequately of the new business being contracted for.

This company was started in Spokane, Wash., six years ago. But the business outgrew its Spokane location, and in March, 1923, the entire company with its personnel moved by special train to its newly-purchased home in Denver. When this move was made the organization consisted of fifty people as against 200 at the present time.

In deciding upon the Denver location the company executives were influenced chiefly by the fact that Colorado atmosphere and scenery are most excellent for motion picture production.

In coming to Denver the company also had the advantage of securing a spacious and well equipped studio at an attractive figure. Among the various improvements made in the studio building since it was purchased by the Alexander Film Company are a new auditorium, a ventilating system and an up-to-date title-board room and title-board equipment.

It is a part of the company's policy to encourage recreational sports among all members of the organization. Tennis, hand-ball and boxing are very popular.

A MAN TO WATCH CLOSELY

The decision of Senator La Follette to run for president on an independent ticket may cause a political upheaval similar to that caused by the entrance of Theodore Roosevelt and Hiram Johnson in 1912, but which party it hurts the most depends entirely upon the nominee the Democrats select at their marathon convention in New York. If they nominate a conservative it probably will result in splitting up both parties so widely that the election of a president will be left to congress; but on the other hand, the nomination of a progressive would mean certain victory for the Democratic party. La Follette who has a large following in both parties, would take away an appreciable support from the Republicans who consider President Coolidge too much of a conservative, while his Democratic following, realizing the danger of throwing the election of the president into congress, with no assurance that he would be a progressive, naturally would consider a "bird in the hand worth two in the bush" and vote for the conservative running under their party standard. There are many groups of dissatisfied persons in this country who will believe Senator La Follette's trade against the major parties. His statement that both are controlled "bosses" and "Wall Street" can very aptly be applied to the Republicans, but any one who believes the charge against the Democrats need only to consider what is going on in New York to discover how absolutely ridiculous is the accusation. If the Democratic party were controlled by a "boss" a nominee would have been selected soon after the favorite sons had been honored three or four times by their respective delegations. Had Wall Street been in control its candidate long ago would have emerged victorious; yet there will be a few even after the convention has finally decided upon a man, whether he be conservative or progressive, who will continue to believe every word Senator La Follette utters. It is safe to predict, however, that his Democratic following will be in the minority if a strong man is nominated.—Bisbee Review.

ARIZONANS SPEND VACATIONS WITHIN THE STATE

A greater percentage of Arizona people are spending their vacations in the state this year than ever before, according to reports received from a number of different localities.

"Full houses" are reported the regular rule by most commercial resorts, and practically all declare this season is one of the best they have enjoyed. Typical of these reports is one from Douglas stating that Cochise county resorts have noted a 75 per cent increase in patronage from last year.

At the same time increased numbers of campers are reported in practically all summering sections, and the White Mountain country appears to be more popular than ever. Northern cities have large numbers of summer visitors.

The principal cause of the larger proportion of Arizonans who are vacationing in their own state is believed to be the "See Arizona First" movement, which is being backed by organizations, motor car dealers and others throughout the state, and which naturally is bringing greater results each succeeding year. A contributing cause is the foot-and-mouth disease still lingering in California, as many people have been reluctant to drive to the coast because of the possibility of continued embargo.

Reports of the larger number of people vacationing in Arizona are borne out by advices received by the Arizona Industrial Congress, which reports a considerable demand for the "Arizona Vacation Directory" recently issued by that organization to provide all agencies a handy preliminary list of the state's commercial summer resorts.

Cas Engines on Farms Equal 30,000-000 Mea

A little 1 1/2 horse power gas engine will operate for about 4 cents an hour and produce as much power as a dozen men. The last census reveals that there are some 2,512,000 gas engines on farms, or enough to furnish power equal to at least 30,000,000 men. Pumping water was one of the first jobs given to the gas engine on the farm, but its usefulness has multiplied until it can do about every stationary job on the farm or ranch and the farm tractor takes up the work where the little engine leaves off.

TRANSLEY'S RING

SYNOPSIS.—Transley's hay-cutting outfit, after stacking 2,000 tons, is on its way to the big Y. D. ranch headquarters. Transley is a master of men and circumstances. Linder, foreman, is substantial, but not self-assertive. George Draxk, one of the men, is an irresponsible chap who proposes to every woman he meets. Transley and Linder dine with Y. D. and his wife and daughter Zen. Y. D. instructs Transley to cut the South Y. D. "spite of his high water" and a fellow named Landson. Draxk proposes to Zen and is nearly rebuffed. Transley pitches camp on the South Y. D. and finds Landson's outfit cutting hay. Dennison Grant, Landson's manager, notifies Transley that he is working under a lease from the legal owners and warns Transley off. All of which means war. Y. D. and Zen ride to the South Y. D. Zen is a natural vamp, not yet halter-broke and ripe for mating. Y. D. has taken a liking to Transley. Zen holds Transley off and encourages Linder. Zen enjoys the prospect of a race between Transley and Linder for her favor, but secretly laughs at both. She has another and more serious encounter with Draxk. Y. D. mowing machines are ruined by iron stakes set in the grass. Zen prevents open war with Landson. Transley half-way proposes and is turned off. Draxk sets a fire that attacks the Landson stacks. The Y. D. outfit hastens to aid the enemy. Zen rides off alone to help. The wind changes and the Y. D. people now have to fight the prairie fire. Zen rides into the river to escape flames. Draxk tries to abduct her. She drowns him—or thinks she has. Grant overtakes her. In trying to ride through fire Zen is thrown and knocked senseless. Zen comes to after several hours of unconsciousness to find herself in the dark with Grant. She has a sprained ankle and both horses have run away. So she and Grant sit on a rock and tell their past lives. Grant, it appears, is a rich man's son who acquires wealth in order to live his own life. Y. D. and his men arrive after daylight. Naturally, in the circumstances, having abandoned Grant rides off. Transley goes to the nearest town. He returns and induces Y. D. to go into partnership with him in the contracting and building business. Transley sweeps Zen off her feet by the force of his love-making.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

When she came down her father and mother and Transley were sitting about the table in the living-room; the room hung with trophies of the chase and of competition; the room which had been the nucleus of the Y. D. estate. There was a colored cover on the table, and the shaded oil lamp in the center sent a comfortable glow of light downward and about. The mammoth shadows of the three people fell on the log walls, darting silently from position to position with their every movement.

Her mother arose as Zen entered the room, and took her hands in a warm, tender grip.

"You're really leaving us," she said. "I'm not saying I object. I think Mr. Transley will make you a good husband. He is a man of energy, like your father. He will do well. You will not know the hardships that we knew in our early married life." Their eyes met, and there was a moment's pause.

"You will not understand for many years what this means to me, Zenith," her mother said, and turned quickly to her place at the table.

She could not remember what they had talked about after that. She had been conscious of Transley's eyes often on her, and of a certain spiritual exaltation within her. She could not remember what she had said, but she knew she had talked with unusual vivacity and charm. It was as though certain storehouses of brilliance in her being, of which she had been unaware, had been suddenly opened to her. It was as though she had been intoxicated by a very subtle wine which did not deaden, but rather quickened, all her faculties.

Afterwards, she had spent long hours among the foothills, thinking and thinking. There were times when the flame of that strange exaltation burned low, indeed; times when it seemed almost to expire. There were moments—hours—of misgivings. She could not understand the strange docility which had come over her; the unprecedented willingness to have her course shaped by another. That strange willingness came as near to frightening Zen as anything had ever done. She felt that she was being carried along in a stream; that she had no desire to resist. She had a strange fear that some day she would need qualities of self-direction, and those qualities would refuse to arise at her command.

She did not fear Transley. She believed in him. She believed in his ability to grapple with anything that stood in his way; to thrust it aside, and press on. She respected the judgment of her father and her mother, and both of them believed in Transley. He would succeed; he would seize the opportunities this young country afforded and rise to power and influence upon them. He would be kind, he would be generous. He would make her proud of him. What more could she want?

That was just it. There were dark moments when she felt that surely there must be something more than all this. She did not know what it was—she could not analyze her thoughts or give them definite form—but in these dark moments she feared that she was being tricked, that the whole thing was a sham which she would discover when it was too late. She did not suspect her mother, or her father, or Transley, one or all, of being parties to this trick; she believed that they did not know it existed. She herself did not know it existed. But the fear was there.

After a week she admitted, much against her will, that possibly Dennison Grant had something to do with it. She had not seen him since she had pressed his fingers and he had ridden away through the smoke-haze of the South Y. D. She had dutifully tried to force him from her mind. But he would not stay out of it. It was about that fact that her misgivings seemed most to center. When she would be thinking of Transley, and wondering about the future, suddenly she would discover that she was not thinking of Transley, but of Dennison Grant. These discoveries shocked and humiliated her. It was an impossible position. She would throw Grant forcibly out of her mind and turn to Transley. And then, in an unguarded moment, Transley would fade from her consciousness, and she would know again that she was thinking of Grant.

At length she allowed herself the luxury of thinking frankly about Dennison Grant. It was a luxury. It brought her a secret happiness which she was wholly at a loss to understand, but which was very delightful, nevertheless. She amused herself with comparing Grant with Transley. They had two points in common: their physical perfection and their fearless, self-confident manner. With these exceptions they seemed to be complete contradictions. The ambitious Transley worshiped success; the philosophical Grant despised it. That difference in attitude toward the world and its affairs was a ridge which separated the whole current of their lives. It even, in a way, shut one from the view of the other; at least it shut Grant from the view of Transley. Transley would never understand Grant, but Grant might, and probably did, understand Transley. That was why Grant was the greater of the two. . . .

She reproached herself for such a thought; it was disloyal to admit that this stranger on the Landson ranch was a greater man than her husband-to-be. And yet honesty—or, perhaps, something deeper than honesty—compelled her to make that admission.

She ran back over the remembered incidents of the night they had spent together, marooned like shipwrecked sailors on a rock in the foothills. His attentiveness, his courtesy, his freedom from any conventional restraint, his manly respect which was so much greater than conventional restraint—all these came back to her with a poignant tenderness. She pictured Transley in his place. Transley would probably have proposed even before he bandaged her ankle. Grant had not said a word of love, or even of affection. He had talked freely of himself—at her request—but there had been nothing that might not have been said before the world. She had been safe with Grant. . . .

After she had thought on this theme for a while Zen would acknowledge to herself that the situation was absurd and impossible. Grant had given no evidence of thinking more of her than of any other girl whom he might have met. He had been chivalrous only. She had sat up with a start at the thought that there might be another girl. . . . Or there might be no girl. Grant was an unusual character. . . .

At any rate, the thing for her to do was to forget about him. She should have no place in her mind for any man but Transley. It was true he had stamped her, but she had accepted the situation in which she found herself. Transley was worthy of her—she had nothing to take back—she would go through with it.

On the principle that the way to drive an unwelcome thought out of the mind is to think vigorously about something else, Zen occupied herself with plans and day-dreams centering about the new home that was to be built in town. Neither her father nor Transley had as yet returned from the trip on which they had gone with a view to forming a partnership, so there had been no opportunity to discuss the plans for the future, but Zen took it for granted that Transley would build in town. He was so enthusiastic over the possibilities of that young and bustling center of population that there was no doubt he would want to throw in his lot with it. This prospect was quite pleasing to the girl; it would leave her within easy distance of her old home; it would introduce her to a type of society with which she was well acquainted, and where she could do herself justice, and it would not break up the associations of her young life. She would still be able, now and again, to take long rides through the tawny foothills; to mingle with her old friends; possibly to maintain a somewhat sisterly acquaintance with Dennison Grant. . . .

After ten days Y. D. returned—alone. He had scarcely been able to believe the developments which he had seen. It was as though the sleepy, lazy cowtown had become electrified. Y. D. had looked on for three days, wondering if he were not in some kind of a dream from which he would awaken presently among his herds in the foothills. After three days he bought a property. Before he left he sold it at a profit greater than the earnings of his first five years on the ranch. It would be indeed a stubborn confidence which could not be won by such an experience, and before leaving for the ranch Y. D. had arranged for Transley practically an open credit with his bankers, and had undertaken to send down all the horses and equipment that could be spared.

Transley had planned to return to the foothills with Y. D., but at the last moment business matters developed which required his attention. He placed a tiny package in Y. D.'s capacious palm.

"For the girl," he said. "I should deliver it myself, but you'll explain?" Y. D. fumbled the tiny package into a vest pocket. "Sure, I'll attend to that," he promised. "Wasn't much of these fancy trimmin's when I settled into double harness, but lots of things has changed since then. You'll be out soon?"

"Just as soon as business will stand for it. Not a minute longer."

On his return home Y. D., after maintaining an exasperating silence until supper was finished, casually handed the package to his daughter.

"Some trinket Transley sent out," he explained. "He'll be here himself as soon as business permits."

She took the package with a glow of expectancy, started to open it, then folded the paper again and ran up to her room. Here she tempted herself for minutes before she would finally open it, whetting the appetite of anticipation to the full. . . . The gem justified her little play. It was magnificent; more beautiful and more expensive than anything her father ever had bought her.

She hesitated strangely about putting it on. To Zen it seemed that the putting on of Transley's ring would be a voluntary act symbolizing her acceptance of him. If she had been carried off her feet—swept into the position in which she found herself—that explanation would not apply to the deliberate placing of his ring upon her finger. There would be no excuse; she could never again plead that she had been the victim of Transley's precipitateness. This would be deliberate, and she must do it herself.

She rather blamed Transley for not having left his old business and come to perform this old rite himself, as he should have done. What was one day of business, more or less? Yet Zen gathered no hint from that incident that always, with Transley, business would come first. It was symbolic—prophetic—but she did not see the sign nor understand the prophecy.

She held the ring between her fingers; slipped it off and on her little fingers; held it so the rays of the sun fell through the window upon it and danced before her eyes in all their primal colors.

"I have to put this on," she said, pursing her lips firmly, "and—forget about Dennison Grant!"

For a long time she thought of that and all it meant. Then she raised the jewel to her lips.

"Help me—help me—" she murmured. With a quick little impetuous motion she drew it on to the finger where it belonged. There she gazed upon it for a moment, as though fascinated by it. Then she fell upon her bed and lay motionless until long after the valley was wrapped in shadow.

The events of these days had almost driven from Zen's mind the tragedy of George Draxk. When she thought of it at all it presented such a grotesque unreality—it was such an unreasonable thing—that it assumed the vague qualities of a dream. It was something unreal and very much better forgotten, and it was only by an unwilling effort at such times that she could bring herself to know that it was not unreal. It was a matter that concerned her tremendously. Sooner or later Draxk's disappearance must be noted—perhaps his body would be found—and while she had little fear that anyone would associate her with the tragedy it was a most unpleasant thing to think about. Sometimes she wondered if she should not tell her father or Transley just what had happened, but she shrank from doing so as from the confession of a crime. Mostly she was able to think of other matters.

Her father brought it up in a startling way at breakfast. Absolutely out of a blue sky he said, "Did you know, Zen, that Draxk has disappeared? Transley tells me you were interested a bit in him, or perhaps I should say he was interested in you?"

Zen was so overcome by this startling change in the conversation that she was unable to answer. The color went from her face and she leaned low over her plate to conceal her agitation.

"Yep," continued Y. D., with no more concern than if a steer had been lost from the herd. "Transley said to tell you Draxk had disappeared and he reckoned you wouldn't be bothered any more with him."

"Draxk was nothing to me," she managed to say. "How can you think he was?"

"Now who said he was?" her father retorted. "For a young woman with the price of a herd of steers on her third finger you're sort of short this mornin'. Now I'm just wonderin' how far you can see through a board fence, Zen. Are you surprised that Draxk has disappeared?"

She was entirely at a loss to understand the drift of her father's talk. He could not connect her with Draxk's disappearance, or he would not approach the matter with such unconcern. That was unthinkable. Neither could Transley, or he would not have sent so brutal a message. And yet it was clear that they thought she should be interested.

Her father's question demanded an answer.

"What should I care?" she ventured at length.

"I didn't ask you whether you cared. I asked you whether you was surprised."

"Draxk's movements were—are nothing to me. I don't know that I have any occasion to be surprised about anything he may do."

"Well, I'm rather glad you're not, because if you don't jump to conclusions, perhaps other people won't. Not that it makes any particular difference."

"Dad," she cried in desperation, "whatever do you mean?"

"It was all plain enough to me, an' plain enough to Transley," her father continued with remarkable calmness. "We seen it right from the first."

"You're talking in riddles, Y. D.," his wife remonstrated. "You're getting Zen all worked up."

"Jewelry seems to be mighty uppittin'," Y. D. commented. "There was nothin' like that in our engagement, eh, Jessie? Well, to come to the point. There was a fire which burned up the valley of the South Y. D. Fires don't start themselves—usually. This one started among the Landson stacks, so it was natural enough to suspect Y. D. or some of his sympathizers. Well it wasn't Y. D., an' I reckon it wasn't Zen, an' it wasn't Transley nor Linder an' every one of the gang's accounted for except Draxk. Draxk thought he was doin' a great piece of business when he fired the Landson hay, but when the wind turned an' burned up the whole valley Draxk sees where he can't play no hero part around here so he loses himself for good. I gathered from Transley that Draxk had been botherin' you a little, Zen, which is why I told you."

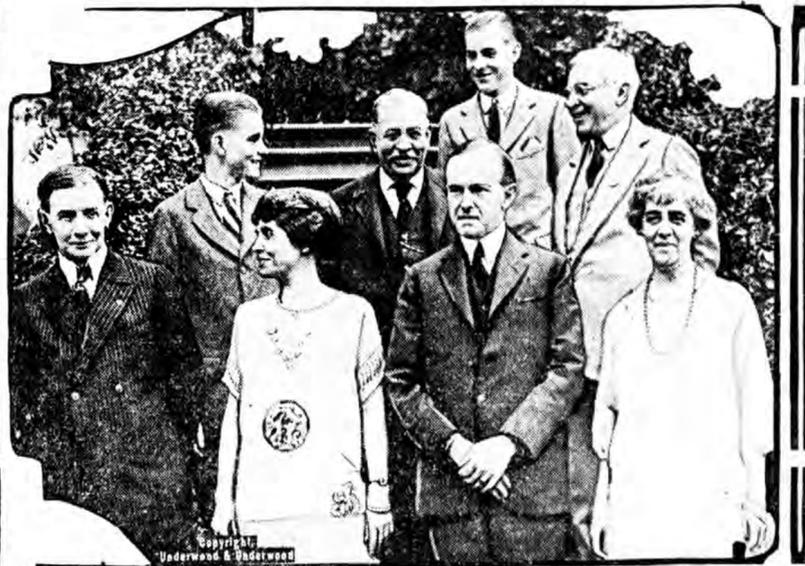

The girl's heart was pounding violently at this explanation. It was logical, and would be accepted readily by those who knew Draxk. She would not trust herself in further conversation, so she slipped away as soon as she could and spent the day riding down the river.

Of course, Grant shows up—and proposes marriage. Does Zen say "yes"—or does she show him Transley's ring?

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Allied Conference Begins in Optimistic Amity—Fighting in Brazil.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE conference of ten nations at London on the Dawes plan for the rehabilitation of Germany and all of Europe began Wednesday with an atmosphere of amity and optimism. Owen D. Young, the New York lawyer who was a member of the Dawes commission, has accepted—for a period of three months—a suggestion that he become "agent general for the reparations payments," which is a sort of fiscal agent for the execution of the Dawes plan. He is also willing to act as arbiter for the reparations commission on questions concerning Germany's default.

This latter position was created on July 8 in the note of Prime Minister MacDonald and Premier Herriot to the powers after conversation between London, Washington and Paris. Mr. Young, when acting as arbiter of reparations questions, would eliminate the French majority on the reparations commission.

Before this can be officially announced, however, two steps are necessary: Adoption by the London conference of the MacDonal-Herriot protocol creating the arbiter of the reparations commission, and some step by President Coolidge approving Mr. Young's appointment.

Mr. Young's acceptance of the position is definite, however, and the American State department has approved it in order to facilitate Mr. MacDonal's job in getting the allied conference to put the Dawes plan into effect. The action became necessary because of the demand of J. P. Morgan & Co. for such representation in the reparations commission in exchange for floating a loan of approximately $200,000,000, chiefly in America.

REAL fighting marks the "revolution" staged by the Paulistas of Sao Paulo against the federal government of the United States of Brazil. Strict censorship of news suppresses details, but enough transpires to indicate that the insurrection may be important. The rebels demand the resignation both of state President Carlos da Campos of Sao Paulo and of President Arturo Bernardes of Brazil, together with guarantees at the forthcoming state and federal elections for the pardon of the rebels in the 1922 outbreak.

Federal official bulletins picture a handful of rebels in possession of Sao Paulo city, soon to be captured. Reports from various sources are to the effect that the losses on both sides already total 3,000; that the rebels, led by Gen. Isidoro Diaz Lopez, are 20,000 strong and can take Santos at any time; that President Da Campos is a fugitive in Rio de Janeiro, and that the federal government fears to risk a decisive battle, having no faith in the loyalty of its soldiers. Anyway, the Italian consul at Santos has asked for two warships and the American consul at Santos, H. W. Goforth—a suggestive name—has also requested naval vessels.

Sao Paulo, the state, is where we Americans get our coffee—about 6,215,000 bags of 132 pounds each a year. It is the richest of the 20 states of the Brazilian republic; is a lot bigger than all New England and has a population of 4,500,000. Sao Paulo, its capital city, is 200 miles south of Rio de Janeiro; is Brazil's second city, with a population of 530,000; is ultra-modern.

Santos, Sao Paulo's port—and the most famous coffee port of the world, is 45 miles distant. It has one of the finest harbors in South America; is thoroughly modern and has a population of about 100,000.

AMERICA for the eighth successive time wins the Olympic track and field sports, scoring 255 points to 166 for Finland; 85 1/2 for Great Britain; 51 1/2 for Sweden; 20 1/2 for France and 10 on. Of the 45 nations entered only 19 broke into the scoring column. Twenty-seven events were held, with the two leaders monopolizing first places as follows: United States, 12; Finland, 10; Great Britain, 3, and Australia and Italy 1 each. Eight new world's records and 13 new Olympic records were made.

The American victories were scored in the following events: 400-meter hurdles, high jump, broad jump, shot-put, 110-meter hurdles, 200-meter dash, hammer throw, pole vault, decathlon, 400-meter relay, 1,600-meter relay, and the discus. The Finns took first in the 10,000-meter run, the javelin, pentathlon, 3,000-meter steeplechase, 1,500-meter run, 5,000-meter run, 10,000-meter cross-country team and individual 3,000-meter team race and the marathon. England won the 100-meter dash, the 800-meter run and 400-meter run. Italy took the 10,000-meter walk, and Australia the hop, step and jump.

An analysis of the point scores shows the evenness of the American team strength, our athletes tallying in 24 of 27 finals, missing only in the walk, the 10,000-meter flat and hop, step and jump. The Finns scored in 17 events and Great Britain in 16. Analysis of the American points shows that Western athletes gained 103 as against 60 for the East, the remaining 29 being won in relay races or team events where East and West worked together.

THE largest co-operative project ever attempted is under way. Charter papers for the Grain Marketing company were granted at Springfield, Ill., Tuesday. The company is capitalized at $25,000,000 and will be entirely owned and controlled by farmers. It will take over the agencies of elevators, private wires, offices and other assets of the Armour Grain company, the Rosenbaum Brothers, the J. C. Shaffer Grain company, all of Chicago, and the Davis, Noland, Merrill Grain company of Kansas City.

Members of the temporary board of directors include: O. E. Bradford, Ohio, president American Farm Bureau federation; W. J. Brown, Minnesota, president American Wheat Growers, Inc.; Harry L. Keefe, Nebraska, president United States Grain Growers, Inc.; Fred A. Mudge, Peru, Ill., president Illinois Farmers' Elevator association; J. M. Dyer, Spencer, Iowa, president Iowa Farmers' Elevator association; Millard Myers, Illinois Farmers' elevator; Oscar Ashworth, Mattoon, Ill.; Gray Silver, West Virginia; J. W. Coverdale, Iowa. The purpose of the new company is to secure for the farmers complete control of the marketing and handling of their produce, which is a complete change from the procedure heretofore. It will also serve as "big brother" of all co-operative elevators, of which there are more than 5,000 throughout the country. Its service will extend to any other farm organization, pool or individual farmer.

IT MAY be the "ad men," instead of the pacifists, preachers, women or Rotarians, who bring back peace to a distracted and war-worn world. The International Advertising convention met in London last week, with delegates from all over the world, including 2,000 from the United States. Lord Burnham, in his address of welcome, said that advertising was "the fume art of trade and the humane literature of business." Referring to the international character of the convention, he said:

"Internationalism is a word which has been soiled by ignoble use, but it is internationalism that is founded on justice and patriotism that we have to look for progress and the prosperity of mankind."

Lou Holland, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, said in his reply that he hoped from the conference would come a "Big Brother" movement that would lead the nations into paths of peace and prosperity.

MANAGEMENT of the Democratic campaign will presumably be ably diplomatic, inasmuch as Mr. Davis was ambassador to the Court of St. James and Frank L. Polk, his right-hand man, was acting secretary of state for six months, 1918-19. It should not lack militancy, either, since Mr. Polk is a grandson of the Confederacy's famous "Fighting Bishop," Leonidas Polk, Episcopal bishop of Louisiana and lieutenant general, who was killed in 1864 by a cannon ball at Pine Mountain, Ga. It is unofficially stated that Mr. Polk will be a sort of general manager, with the title of chief adviser. Mr. Davis has withdrawn from all his business connections in order to give all his time to the campaign.

William Randolph Hearst, who flew the coop the moment the Democrats nominated "the Morgan attorney," and Mayor Hylan of New York city, are taking a vacation on the publisher's California ranch. Mr. Hearst says: "Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Davis are a little too conservative for us and Mr. LaFollette is a little too radical. We probably will print the news as it happens, and our own policies, and let it go at that."

Former Candidate McAdoo has gone to Europe, but gave out a statement before sailing in which he expressed his confidence that Nominee Davis would, as President, "faithfully execute the party's progressive mandate," and promised to take part in the campaign upon his return in September.

DISASTROUS forest fires were burning all last week in all the Pacific coast states from Southern California up into Canada. Thursday the menace was lessened in places by rains and light winds. Probably 30,000 men, many of them drafted from touring automobiles, hotels and camps, have been fighting the flames. Thursday night San Francisco used the radio to warn campers near seven fires to get out at once. The loss of life has been small, though hundreds have had narrow escapes. The property loss has been large. Forests, mining camps and lumber camps have suffered to the extent of millions.

NOMINEE LAFOLLETTE will not endorse Nominee Bryan as a Democratic-LaFollette vice presidential candidate, but will fight him because he is "tainted with his party's ills." He will even carry the fight into Nebraska. LaFollette is planning a "rich man's campaign out of the poor man's pocket." Plans call for a campaign fund—minimum, $3,000,000; maximum, $5,000,000—each worker to contribute one day's pay, with smaller contributions thankfully received. Alexander Kahn, owner of the Jewish newspaper Forward (Chicago), is to be the collection agent.

UNCLE SAM is getting out of Santo Domingo. Gen. Horatio Vasquez has been inaugurated President of the Dominican republic. The American flag has been lowered and the Dominican emblem flies in its stead. The United States marines are being put on transports. It has taken Uncle Sam eight years to straighten things out so that the Dominicans are in shape to try to go it alone again. Are they grateful? Well, hardly. Never for one moment during the eight years did they cease from protest.

OUR American world flyers landed in Paris Tuesday and in London Wednesday, Thursday they landed in Brough, where they will take a week in preparing for their flight across the Atlantic. They are tentatively scheduled to arrive in Boston August 21 by way of the Orkney islands, Iceland, Greenland, Labrador and Nova Scotia.

IN THE indictments growing out of the oil leases Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, pleaded not guilty at El Paso and furnished $5,000 bail. Harry F. Sinclair in Washington made arrangements to carry to the higher court his contention that a senate committee cannot compel a citizen to answer questions. The Free State government has released Eamon de Valera, imprisoned since last August.

Charles B. Warren, American ambassador to Mexico, says he will return July 22 to resign, his work there being done. Ambassador Massamio Hanahara has sailed for Japan, expressing the hope that Japanese-American relations will remain friendly and that he will return to Washington. Jules J. Jusserand, since 1903 ambassador from France to the United States and dean of the diplomatic corps at Washington, has gone home for a vacation. It is rumored that he may not return.

The prince of Wales, having become thirty years of age, has been obliged to promise his royal parents that he will "begin to look around for a wife." He will sail in August for the United States—to see the international polo games.

HOME-COMING

I HAVE never been away from home a great deal. A week at some distant relative's or a summer engaged in recreation or employment with strangers has made up the tale of my separation from my family. I remained in the home of my childhood until I had made a home for myself. But even these short separations from home have given me an appreciation of the joy of getting back.

I rushed everywhere in and out of the house to note the changes that had taken place during my absence. I visited my old familiar haunts, I looked up my old companions, and I snuggled down in my special corner with a book in my hand and another sitting by, both of us happy over the reunion. It was great to be home again! How much more so to those who have been away for a longer time and at a greater distance to return to the home fireside.

Home-coming is for all of us, and should be more or less a sentimental time. We appreciate the comforts and the privileges and the delights of home the more by being separated from them for a time. It is another case of absence making the heart grow fonder. The absence and the home-coming, too, often give one a clearer appreciation of the obligations and responsibilities one should have toward home.

Home-coming is a pleasure because it gives opportunity to talk over accomplishments, to stimulate ambition and to fire the imagination of the younger and less experienced members of the family. We have been out in the world even though it may be for so short a time, we have seen new sights, we have done wonderful deeds, we have tried our wings and have found them strong. We have experience behind us, and we are eager to confer its benefits upon the less sophisticated members of the family.

Sometimes there is the selfish son who sees in home-coming only a time for pleasure, for self-gratification, for indolence, for indulgence in eating, drinking and sleeping. He gets out of the family everything that it will give. He contributes nothing to its happiness or to its progress; he looks out only for what he can get to satisfy his selfish desires. His return is not looked for with joyous anticipation; his going is relief.

Home-coming for all of us should be a time of renewing old acquaintances, of visiting old scenes and old friends, of stimulating old ideals. There are the younger children to drink in the tales of adventure and accomplishment, to be stirred and stimulated by them. Those who come back may get pleasure; they may give help and encouragement. If their object, however, is only selfish gratification, the satisfying of old appetites, then it were better they did not come at all.

PAINTING THE LILY

I HAVE often felt that perhaps cow-boys have a kind of conscious feeling of their own beauty, and that possibly, like young girls, they would like sometimes to touch it up. Perhaps the lily sighs for a lipstick or a box of rouge.

Of course a young girl likes to look pretty; it is a feeling quite human. It gives her self-respect and makes her feel more comfortable to know that she is well groomed, and becomingly dressed, and it gives her a sense of satisfaction to realize that her friends, both male and female recognize her attractiveness. Not even a savage puts on her simple costume carelessly.

I have never quite understood, however, why the modern girl has so little faith in the effectiveness of youthful natural beauty—why she would take a perfectly fine complexion or a beautiful head of hair and dub it the one with parti-colored cosmetics like a hotentot unless—I hate to think it—she is determined deliberately to attract attention to herself at any cost. Of course she must follow the fashion, changing as it is. She cannot have her skirts trailing when other girls have theirs at the shoe tops or at the knees; she cannot wear puffed sleeves when her friends are eliminating that part of their garments entirely; she cannot wear her hair down her back straight or in curls when "cootie curls" are in style, but she need not make herself seem either frilly or extreme. She should give some thought to fitness.

I met a little girl yesterday morning when I was on the way to my office. Her hair, straight as an Indian's, was crumpled and curled until it stood out like a bunch of wire; her face flared unattractively as if she had been cooking blanchits over a hot kitchen stove in the summer time. Her open-work silk stockings through which a sharp wind was blowing were quite in contrast to which was thrown open exposing a rather wide expanse of chilly bony chest. Perhaps she was comfortable, undoubtedly she was stylish, but pretty—not even to her family.

She was grotesque, she was a caricature of youth, she was a lily daubed up with paint by the crudest hand. She looked like a hardback rider at the circus. I could only laugh and then feel sorry. She was a perfectly nice girl spoiled.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

LEGION WAS LUCKY IN 1924 CONGRESS

In outlining the achievements of the national legislative committee of the American Legion during the first session of the Sixty-eighth congress, John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman of the committee, stated that eight measures of major importance were enacted largely through the efforts of the Legion. He declared 1924 was the most successful year in the history of the Legion in carrying out policies.

The eight Legion-sponsored bills, made laws, were: the adjusted compensation bill, the creation of the committee on World War veterans' legislation of the house of representatives, Reed-Johnson bill, affecting more than 100,000 disabled veterans and their dependents; the Fernald-Langley bill, authorizing the construction of fireproof hospitals costing $6,500,000 and containing 2,350 beds; provision for a $500,000 training school for blind veterans at Evergreen, Md.; the Fredericks bill, providing a $1,500,000 fireproof hospital, containing 500 beds, at Santa Monica, Calif.; house resolution authorizing a survey and investigation of World War veterans' hospitals and soldiers' homes; provision for the erection of permanent stone crosses in overseas cemeteries; and the war trophies bill, to distribute the vast amount of war material captured and surrendered from Germany.

Other measures which the Legion approved and extended its influence toward enactment were: the Immigration act of 1924, which restricts and selects immigrants and excludes the Japanese; the constitutional amendment to prohibit child labor, which now goes to the states for ratification.

Important provisions of the Reed-Johnson bill are: extension to January 1, 1925, of the presumption of automatic service connection for disabilities, from the former period of three years after discharge, a provision which will allow 30,000 veterans to immediately connect their disabilities with the service and thereby receive government compensation; free care and treatment in government hospitals for any veteran of any war or expedition since 1857, without regard to the nature or origin of his disabilities; requirement that compensation cannot be reduced or discontinued without three months' notice to the disabled veteran; lapsed war risk insurance is automatically reinstated retroactively where at the time of lapse the veteran had sufficient unpaid compensation due him to revive his insurance; the rating of disability and awarding of compensation and hospitalization was ordered decentralized; awards of compensation for disability can now be made in the field.

De Bergerac Real Person Savinier Cyrano de Bergerac was a French author who was born in 1639 and who died in 1655. Edmund Ros-tand wrote a drama in which De Bergerac was the hero, and the play was in many ways true to facts. The real De Bergerac was distinguished for his courage in the field and for the duels he fought. These numbered more than a thousand, most of them fought on account of his monstrously large nose.

BEST INSURANCE

"The American Legion is this country's best insurance providing it maintains right leadership," was the declaration of Maj. Gen. Clarence Edwards in dedicating the $400,000 memorial building at Athol, Mass., recently. "Fraternity," the general said, "is the greatest thing we received from the war, and the Legion is the only place where this fraternity can be perpetuated." General Edwards praised the valor of the American soldier in France, but declared that the work of the peace-time soldier and the high standard of citizenship which is now represented by them in the American Legion is equally deserving of praise, and in certain instances of high honors. He said: "The notions of the average American soldier since the war, under the leadership of such organizations as the Legion, qualify him for new decorations to be pinned beside the Croix de Guerre and the Distinguished Service Cross."

Fire Salute Over Grave at Request of Mother

Each Memorial day for the last three years a mother, identity unknown, has asked the firing squad of Altona Cad-worth post, American Legion, Milwaukee, to fire a salute over her son's grave in Forest Home cemetery. The boys have complied with the sorrowing mother's wish each year. Three years ago, after memorial services at the graves of veterans, a woman approached, weeping. She asked one of the boys if a salute could not be fired over her son's grave. The squad marched to the grave she designated and fired a salute. The incident has been repeated every year since.

PROFESSIONAL NURSE SAYS TANLAC HAS NO EQUAL

By reason of the fact that she speaks from her long experience as a professional nurse, the statement of Mrs. J. Clark of 415 Walsworth avenue, Oakland, Calif., will be of interest to all who are in need of an upbuilding tonic.

"In all my fifteen years' experience as a trained nurse," says Mrs. Clark's statement, "I never found the equal of Tanlac as a stomach medicine and tonic. Two years ago an attack of influenza left me without appetite and my stomach in such a bad fix that the little 'I did eat' seemed to do me harm instead of good.

"Stomach pains would make me so weak I would feel right faint. The least exertion would completely exhaust me and six months before taking Tanlac I was so weak I had to hire my housework done. I was in bed most of the time for two months and was getting desperate.

"Tanlac was more than a match for my troubles and eight bottles left me feeling fine. I eat and sleep like a child and have energy and strength that makes life a pleasure. Tanlac is simply grand."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Joy in Pictures

Such joy as the home may gain from "The Holland Flower Market" with its galaxy of colors; such pleasure as every child finds in the happiness of Leubach's "Shepherd Boys," lying there on the hillside, unconsciously loving life! Could there be anything more beautiful than the lovely shadows of the stately winter tree branches against the walls of that "Independence Hall" in Philadelphia?

Official Deference

In his book, "The Southlands of Siva," A. Butterworth tells the following:

"An assistant commissioner had his office management severely criticized by the commissioner, who closed the report with these words: 'This young man seems a past-master in doing nothing.' The report was sent to the young man for his explanation. Against the above remark he wrote: 'Far be it from me to dispute the opinion of an expert in the art.'—London Tatler.

Don't chuckle if you put over a substitute when an advertised product is called for. Maybe your customer will never come back.

Against All Tradition

Approaching the great director, the young chap proceeded to say: "I think you had better get another camera man for the next production, sir."

"You mean 'Barbara Frietchie'?"

"Yes."

"But I have watched you for a long time. You can do excellent work. Why not carry on?"

"History forbids. My name is Jackson. I can't shoot 'Barbara Frietchie.'"

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND LIGHT FROM SUN SAME TO PLANTS?

The discovery that the seasonal blossoming and fruiting of plants is caused by the length or day, made a few years ago by investigators in the United States Department of Agriculture, has been completely confirmed by experiments with artificial light and colored light. Previous to these investigations, which were carried on by W. W. Garner, H. A. Allard, and R. A. Steinberg, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, normal plants never had been fully developed under artificial light, but it has been shown that under such conditions plants can be grown normally and will produce normal seed.

Artificial control of all the conditions necessary to the normal development of the plants from germination to maturing of the seed has been secured by specially designed apparatus to which no daylight can enter. The light rays from a gas-filled tungsten lamp are filtered through a layer of running water which carries away most of the heat while interfering very little with the passage of the light. By means of colored glass or colored chemicals in the water, sunlight can be simulated or light of widely different colors or spectral composition can be obtained, as well as lights of intensities equal to or greater than that of sunlight. The day length is regulated by electric time switches which turn the light on and off at the desired time. Inside this apparatus daily and seasonal changes may be made to go at complete variance to the day and seasons going on outside.

Among the more than 60 species of plants which have been grown under these conditions are lettuce, celery, spinach, morning glory, Rudbeckia, Godetia, cypress vine, soybean, bidens, chenopodium and pomonilla.

With all these plants the response to the characteristic autumn and winter blossoming and fruiting when exposed to the short artificial day. The development of green plants. Healthy length of day has been the same as in sunlight. The "short day" plants summer blooming plants blossom when given a long day under electric lights.

Practical conditions, say the investigators, preclude the use of artificial light in place of daylight, but it will be possible in growing some greenhouse plants to extend the natural day by use of electric lights to speed up blooming. Obviously this practice will be useful in case of "long day" and "intermediate day" plants. A relatively low power illumination can be used, extending the length of day from 16 to 18 hours for many plants. Intense lights have been found unnecessary and wasteful. It is said that for commercial use engineers and horticulturists must work out the particular requirements of special crops.

Experiments have shown the falling of a rather widely accepted view of plant physiologists, particularly those in Europe, that certain wave lengths of visible light are essential to normal seed has been produced with wide variations in composition of the light used.

CREAM SEPARATOR PAYS 80%

Few farmers attempting to sell cream continue with the method of hand skimming known to our grandmothers. It is too costly, a daily profit of 500% for the cream separator compared with hand skimming being figured for a small herd of 8 cows. The invention of the centrifugal cream separator by a Swiss scientist in 1879, and Prof. Babcock's invention of the Babcock test for fat content of milk soon afterwards, put the dairy industry on a business basis for the first time. These two discoveries plus the use of the spring balance scales to weigh up the milkings of each cow for the weeding out process are responsible for the rise of the dairy business largely.
