CAR IS WRECKED ON SONOITA ROAD NEAR PATAGONIA

Sunday morning, about 11 o'clock, a large Studebaker car driven by J. T. Johnson, veterinarian of the 10th Cavalry, Ft. Huachuca, overturned on the state highway near the bridge crossing the Sonoita creek at Patagonia and all of the occupants were seriously injured.

The car was a complete wreck and was taken to the East Side garage in Patagonia for repairs.

The injured are Corp. Edward Pinkston, Veterinary J. T. Johnson, Private Walter Bailey, Mrs. Ligging, and another soldier whose name we were unable to learn.

Pinkston suffered a fractured skull and is not expected to recover; Johnson was badly cut about the face and received other injuries; Bailey suffered several fractured ribs and other cuts and bruises; and the others were more or less severely injured.

The wreck was caused by the car striking a cement culvert railing which projected about a foot above the level of the roadbed, causing the car to turn a complete somersault. The windshield, top, two wheels, fenders and radiator were completely smashed, and the main drive shaft was pulled apart.

Johnson, who was driving the car, said he did not know what caused the wreck. The car was on the wrong side of the road when the accident occurred, and he could not explain why it was there, as he said he was not trying to pass another car at the time. He was not driving at an excessive rate of speed.

Johnson and Bailey were picked up shortly after the accident by E. F. Bohlinger of Patagonia and brought to Patagonia, from where they were taken to the base hospital at Nogales by an army car from Fort Huachuca.

The party was on its way to attend the football game in Nogales between the 10th Cavalry and the 25th Infantry teams when the accident occurred.

AUCTION SALE BRINGS OWNER SHIP OF RANCH

The Sanford ranch, at Bloxton, was sold Monday at auction to settle a long-standing dispute on the part of its owners for complete and undivided ownership. The property was jointly owned by Mrs. Leroy Miller and Mrs. Fred McKee of Washington, D. C., who are sisters, the former owning seven-eighths and the latter one-eighth. Both desired the property but Mrs. McKee could not decide on paying the price asked for the larger interest held by her sister. The matter finally was decided by putting the property up at auction, each having representatives at the sale to bid in the property. Mrs. Miller purchased the property for $5200, which gave Mrs. McKee just $40 more than she had been previously offered for her interest.

11 CONVICTS GET XMAS PAROLE

Christmas paroles were left in the hands of 11 of the inmates of the state penitentiary at Florence Christmas eve, it was announced by the governor's office. The 11 for whom Gov. G. W. P. Hunt signed paroles were prisoners whose minimum terms had expired. They were paroled for good behavior.

The names of the paroled men were not given out by the board of pardons and paroles, which is in keeping with a rule not to make public names of those paroled or pardoned.

GOV. HUNT WANTS BANKER LEWIS RETURNED

Phoenix.—Requisition for the extradition of P. K. Lewis, former president and head of the Central Finance Corporation of Phoenix, from Wichita, Kan., to Phoenix, was issued to the governor of Kansas last week by Governor Hunt.

Lewis, according to the requisition for papers authorizing his removal, is wanted in Phoenix on an indictment issued October 16, 1923, by the Maricopa grand jury charging him with embezzlement. Lewis, according to the petition to Governor Hunt asking the requisition, is now under arrest in Wichita.

GEOLOGIC REPORT DESCRIBES OIL AND GAS FIELDS

The department of the interior has just issued Bulletin 756 of the geological survey, which is made up of eight reports that have already been published as individual booklets. This bulletin will be of particular interest to geologists and oil and gas operators working in the Reky mountain, mid-west and gulf coast fields, for it contains the geological survey's reports on the geology and oil prospects in the George oil field of Wyoming, the Crow Indian reservation of Montana, the El Dorado oil field of Arkansas, the Marshall-Denham area of Oklahoma and Texas, the Ranger district of Texas, and the Brooks, Steen, and Grand Saline salt domes of Texas. The bulletin is illustrated with maps, geologic sections, and well logs, which should be of use to drillers and operators in the areas described.

E. P. & S. W. OBTAINS PERMISSION TO CHANGE FINANCING

Washington.—An interstate commerce commission order giving formal and final approval to the financing steps taken by the Reading Company to carry out the supreme court decree requiring a divorce of its anthracite and railroad interests was entered recently. The Reading Company itself was authorized under the reorganization to take over and operate the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad system and its component railroad subsidiaries and to issue $63,084,000 in new 4 1/2 per cent gold bonds in exchange for old securities.

The El Paso & Southwestern Railroad system also obtained the commission's permission for a complicated exchange of securities between the operating, holding and subsidiary companies comprising it, which will result, it was said, in simplifying the financial organization.

DAIRY PROGRAM AT U. OF A.

The dairy program which will be given at the University of Arizona during Farm and Home Week, January 16, will offer a variety of subjects. Dr. S. E. Douglass, state veterinarian, will discuss some of the common diseases of dairy cattle. Dr. Douglass will give special attention to the diseases which are common among the dairy cattle in Arizona. Garget, milk fever, tuberculosis, abortion, difficult breeding, and troubles at time of parturition will be discussed in detail.

Frank Reed Saunders, of Phoenix, will talk on the place of dairying in Arizona. Having been a dairymen all his life and having spent some fifteen years in the state, there is possibly no one quite so well fitted to discuss this subject as Mr. Saunders. He will take up in detail the essentials for successful dairying and will emphasize the part dairying should play on the Arizona farm.

The new judging demonstration that will be given by Mr. Saunders at the University farm will be of special interest to all dairymen. The desirable and undesirable points of conformation will be pointed out by him and a class of cows will be placed and reasons given for the placing.

Governor Hunt to Speak

Governor G. W. P. Hunt will appear on the Farm and Home program at the University on Thursday night, January 17. His subject will be "The Colorado River Pact."

His speech will probably mark the peak of interest in the three-day program of interesting events at this big meeting. The purpose of the meeting is to bring up-to-date farm and home information to the farmers and homesteaders of the state, as well as to have subjects of general interest discussed by able speakers.

PUTTING LABELS ON COUNTRY

"What town is this?" All tourists asked the motorist, and he pointed to the sign on the side of the road, just as they also put "through" or "no" signs on the traveler.

"What road is this?" is asked almost as often, especially on the less traveled highways. Main traveled roads are rapidly being marked, so that the visitor from afar is not confused.

"What river is this?" is often a matter of wonder to the motorist who passes over several branches of the same stream, along side a lake, or over a bridge without knowing what body of water it is which he crosses or passes.

The League of American Pen Women is making the various state highway commissions to place suitable markers near famous streams to inform the traveling public. It is a laudable work, but why the traveler wants to know, stop at famous streams? Why not mark all bodies of water on or near any and all roads, so that the traveler may get better acquainted with the country through which he passes?

Municipalities find it pays to welcome the tourist, to guide him surely and quickly, to make him feel at home. The "stop! Ten miles an hour, under penalty of the law" sign is disappearing in favor of the "Our speed limit is 15 miles an hour; please observe it, as we make you welcome" type of sign. With the latter goes the purchase of red markers and stream labels, worthy work for any civic club to take up, that the municipality be visited with joy and remembered with pleasure.

Common sense is the ability to take the worst and make the best of it.—Exchange.

CORE DRILLING CONTINUES IN BENSON OIL FIELD

Core drilling has been in progress in the Benson oil field for several weeks, under the direction of Major M. A. Bailey, a geologist and oil man of much experience, and Captain W. L. Rucker, a California oil man. These men are associated with Whittier, Calif., capitalists in a syndicate composed of 24 men, who have been operating as wildcaters for many years in other parts of the country. Last year Captain Rucker became interested in this part of the state and secured oil leases to approximately 170,000 acres of land, in four parcels in various parts of southeastern Arizona and northern Sonora, adjoining Cochise county.

A number of holes have been put down at Benson to determine whether a burnt out condition exists in that district, and it is the intention to follow up the diamond drill tests with a deep well test with a standard rig. This site for the deep test, it is reported, has been selected and operations will soon commence.

The Rucker syndicate also has approximately 27,000 acres of land under lease in the San Rafael valley, near Patagonia, on which tests will be made within the next few months.

NEGRO WARD BELIEVED TO BE EX-CONVICT

Globe, Ariz.—Discovery of a letter last week among the effects of W. R. Ward, negro prisoner, charged with the murder early in the morning of December 26 of Ted Grosh, Arizona University student, apparently indicated that the alleged slayer had formerly been a convict in the Oklahoma state penitentiary, officers said.

Addressing Ward as "My Old Pal," the writer told various items of news about the penitentiary, using the words, "since you were here" in connection with a statement about changes among the guards, according to the Globe.

Miss Grace McConic, companion of Ward, who was in the state penitentiary as a convict, is in Phoenix, where she is still being delayed in order to give her a chance to fully recover from the shock. The funeral of Grosh was held at Miami Sunday.

Ward was a musician and actor, appeared in Globe recently at a theater as a substitute in a negro vaudeville show.

Believes of Ward are making efforts to aid in his defense, it became known recently.

Chief of J. Alf Edwards and deputies have collected what appears to be the only evidence against Ward and are now engaged in seeking persons who saw Ward and Rex Catron, white barbers held as a material witness, on the night of December 25 and the following day.

TO TAKE REFERENDUM ON MERCHANT MARINE

Farmers Favor Any Quick Means of Reaching Markets.

A referendum to get the opinion of farmers on the American merchant marine will soon be taken by the American Farm Bureau federation.

Gray Silver, legislative representative of the federation, and other members of the farm delegation visiting Europe, held two conferences with Chairman Farley of the shipping board, while crossing to Europe recently on the Leviathan.

Following these conferences Mr. Silver issued a statement which in part is as follows:

"The American farmers strongly favor an adequate American merchant marine for reasons common to all classes, and for reasons peculiar to their business. We are obviously interested in good highways, good and efficient railroads and in coastwise and in internal waterways, in deep sea shipping and in every other means of reaching our market economically and quickly.

"As to the means by which we are to build and maintain a prosperous merchant marine, such as we need, I cannot assume to speak for the farmers of the United States. After our return from Europe, the American Farm Bureau federation proposes to take a referendum of its membership on that question, which will doubtless determine our position regarding such national policies and legislation as may be asked for, in order to establish and effectively maintain a balanced merchant marine of adequate size under the American flag."

Pending his return to the United States and the formation of his policy, Mr. Farley has asked Mr. Silver to transmit his views to the membership of the federation.

Mr. Farley's statement, in part, follows:

"An American merchant marine is as vital to the agricultural interests of the country as to the manufacturers.

"Our country today is producing a surplus of agricultural products which must be marketed abroad. The American farmer, through organizations like the American Farm Bureau federation, is seeking new markets. The foreign service of our steamship companies will prove of the greatest assistance in locating purchasers of our agricultural products. It is the business of the steamship company to obtain cargoes. Its representatives can be relied upon to use their utmost endeavors to place American products in the hands of the consumers of other nations.

"The American people were brought face to face with the need of an adequate merchant marine in 1915 and 1916. They then saw the world markets for their products rise, but at the same time they found it impossible to supply these markets or control the situation because of the fact that we had no merchant marine able to transport our goods, except at the will of belligerent nations who ordered us here, there and everywhere; in fact, we were told along what course the ocean we must operate. Such a condition is distasteful to Americans, but must exist so long as we are not the possessors of a fleet ourselves. It cannot last. We will have a merchant marine. The question then remains: How soon—five or twenty-five years?"

Appoint Fruit Committee.
The Illinois Agricultural association has appointed an advisory committee of six for the fruit and vegetable marketing department of the state organization. It is hoped that a great deal of interest may be stimulated in co-operative marketing in both fruit and vegetables during the coming year.

FARM BUREAU RADIO SERVICE

Regular Weekly Program From Washington Inaugurated—Other Stations Planned.

Radio station WRC—Washington, D. C., broadcasted its first regular farm bureau program the night of November 26. E. B. Reid, assistant Washington representative of the farm bureau, inaugurated the Washington service. A farm bureau program is now broadcasted from WRC each Monday night at eight o'clock.

The opening of the Washington radio program is the second step in the plan of the farm bureau to have the farmers' voice in the air each night of the week. Negotiations are under way through the Radio Corporation of America to place similar farm bureau programs on one or other eastern station and two western stations.

Station KYW, Chicago, has carried a 30-minute farm bureau program each Tuesday night for several months.

MARKETING OHIO LIVE STOCK

Producers Expect to Use Individual Contract With Their Co-operative Associations.

Live stock producers of Ohio who are using co-operative methods in marketing their live stock are expecting to use an individual producer contract with their co-operative associations. A form of contract has been approved by the board of directors of the Ohio Live Stock Shippers' association, representing nearly 90 county associations, and is now being carried to the various counties for consideration.

Five county associations, now in process of reorganization under Ohio's new co-operative marketing law, are expected to be the first in which the contract will be used. Use of an individual contract in co-operative marketing is claimed by many co-operative leaders to be partly responsible for the success of such organizations as the fruit co-operatives of California, tobacco co-operatives and others. Up to the present time, however, there has been practically no use made of the contract system in the co-operative marketing of live stock.

TALES OF THE OLD FRONTIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE WAS SCALPED—AND LIVED!

WHEN tearing the scalps from the heads of their victims, the red fiends sped away before the settlers arrived upon the scene to avenge their dead." So reads the account of an Indian massacre in one of the old dime novel thrillers, for in the popular mind the victim of the Indian scalping knife always died instantly and in terrible agony. And yet—

In the Omaha public library museum is a human scalp preserved in alcohol. Over in England lives a man—or at least he was living only a few years ago—to whom that scalp belongs. It was jerked from his head by a Cheyenne warrior in Nebraska back in 1867.

William Thompson was his name, and as a young English laborer he was employed by the Union Pacific railroad in the summer of 1867 when it was pushing its rails westward from North Platte, Neb. One day with four companions he started out on a hand-car to repair telegraph lines which the Indians had torn down.

The Cheyennes, whose choicest grounds the railroad was then invading, had resolved to stop the advance of the white man's "iron horse," which was tearing away all the buffalo and other game. A party of young warriors from Chief Turkey Legs' band decided to make the attempt near Plum Creek.

So they tied a big stick to the rails and sat down to see what would happen. It happened when the handcar bearing Thompson and his companions came speeding down the track. The car sprang high into the air and the men were hurled to the ground. They tried to run away, but were soon overtaken by the Indians.

Thompson was shot through the arm, knocked down and partly stunned. An Indian immediately scalped him, but as the savage jumped on his horse to ride away, the white man saw the scalp slip from his belt. Although still half-unconscious, Thompson crawled to where it lay and recovered it. When a rescue party reached him he was still alive and still holding on to his scalp.

When he was taken back to Omaha he took the scalp with him in a pall of water, for he hoped that it might be put back on his head. Such an operation was attempted and Dr. R. C. Moore tried to graft the scalp back in its original position. The operation was not successful and after Thompson returned to England he had the scalp tanned and sent it to Doctor Moore, who presented it to the museum.

THE CHARGE OF THE NIGHT-SHIRT BRIGADE

ONE September night in 1868 Paddy Boyle and Leander Herron, dispatch bearers of the Third United States infantry, were speeding along the trail between Fort Hays and Fort Larned, Kan. Suddenly they heard the sound of distant firing and, true to soldier tradition, they rode to the sound of the guns.

Guided by the flash of the weapons, they soon arrived at a place where an Indian war party was attacking a government wagon train. Boyle and Herron paused only long enough to load pistols for each hand. Then they dashed into the thick of the fight, and before the Indians were aware of their presence they had reached the corralled wagon train in safety.

Here they found four soldiers defending themselves against the onslaughts of an overwhelming force of Dog Soldier Cheyennes, the boldest and cruellest warriors of the plains. All of the soldiers' horses had been killed and their last chance of escape was gone, unless some one could break through the line of their besiegers and carry the news of their plight to the nearest fort.

Boyle immediately volunteered for the job. Five minutes after he had disappeared in the darkness the besieged heard shots and yells, then silence. They were convinced that Boyle had been killed and that their case was hopeless. After hearing of repeated charges of the savages, they found their ammunition running low. Finally there were only 12 rounds left, and by this time Herron was the only uninjured man in the party.

Just as dawn was breaking they saw that the Indians were preparing for another charge, and to add to their despair they noticed what appeared to be a band of warriors clad in white buckskin riding to reinforce the savages. They lined their sights on these new enemies, but before they could fire they heard a voice shouting "Don't shoot!" Then a man threw up his carbine and yelled. To their delight they recognized Paddy Boyle and saw that his companions were cavalrymen. The Indians immediately broke and fled.

As the white-clad horsemen rode up to the corral, Herron said to Boyle, "What kind of uniform do you call this?"

"Well," replied Boyle with a laugh, "the boys were all asleep when I reached the fort, and they didn't take time to dress. So all they've got on is their underclothes."

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

LITTLE WHITE DOG

"I'm only a little white dog. I'm not very large. In fact I'm really little, really small.

"I'm not particularly beautiful. In fact I don't believe I'd even be called pretty.

"My hair is shaggy and somewhat curly though it is more apt to look snarly than curly.

"Still, my master does the best he can with it. It is difficult hair with which to do anything.

"But it doesn't matter to me that I am not a big creature. It doesn't matter to me that I am not beautiful. It doesn't matter to me that my hair isn't pretty.

"Nor does it matter to my master. That is the best of all.

"My master is a fine boy. He goes to school. He studies lessons out of many books. It is surprising to see how many books he studies and surely he will be very wise when he grows up.

"He always comes home from school with an armful of books.

"I wonder then if he is going to pay attention to the books and not to me.

"But no, he doesn't bother about his books until much later on when it is dark and when I curl up in his lap or lie by his feet and rest while he studies.

"I'd be glad to help him with his lessons, but I know I can't. I am not a student. I never was and I feel sure I never will be.

"And so I don't bother to try for I know I'd only be a nuisance to my master if I tried to look at the books and see what they were all about.

"When I was only a wee dog, no more than a puppy, I believe I tore up a school book once and chewed some of it.

"Probably I swallowed some knowledge then. But it has never been of any use to me and it has never been of any help to me.

"I don't know about anything because of that book. What I know I have learned because of my master and my own good sense which has been handed down to one dog after another for generation after generation.

"Of course, I do not mean that learning has been handed to us in our paws. I mean that as an expression to let you know, if you don't already, that dogs 'inherit' as they say, certain qualities.

"We used to have some wolf ancestors years and years ago, they say, and the way we bury bones and find them again comes from the old wolf strain in us which bids us save some food for a rainy day.

"Now I don't mean an actual rainy day.

"That is just an expression which means a day when things aren't at their best and when it is well to have a little something saved for such a time.

"But, oh, the best of all is the way my master loves me and treats me.

"In the summer time he goes to play in a park nearby. In that park there is a little drinking place. My master puts his head down over a spray of water which is always coming up and has a drink.

"But he doesn't forget about me. He holds me up in his arms and he takes the water in his hand and I lap it up from his hand.

"Of course, I can't get a great deal at a time this way and so he holds me in his arms, under his left arm, to be exact, and I am given all I want.

"My tongue is so refreshed. He dampens it for me. And he doesn't think that just because there isn't a regular drink for dogs to drink that I must wait until we get home.

"And everyone loves to see my master's devotion to me. I can see that they think it is very sweet, and I am so happy.

"No one minds if I have a drink from my master's hand at this little fountain for the water keeps bubbling up fresh all the time.

"But, oh, it is such a wonderful thing to be loved! It is such a wonderful thing to be looked after and cared for and petted and treated so well and so affectionately.

"It is so wonderful never to be forgotten!

"What does it matter if one is only a little white dog, not very large and not beautiful and not even pretty and whose hair is not the nicest in the world so long as one is the pet of a perfect young master?

"It doesn't matter in the least! That's what this little white dog says."

Winter Find You Tired and Achy? Do You Suffer Constant Backache—Feel Old and Worn Out? Then Follow the Advice of These Good Folks!

DO YOU get up these winter mornings feeling tired, weak—achy all over? Are you so lame, stiff and miserable it seems you can never get back in trim? Does your back ache with a dull, constant throbbing? Sharp, rheumatic pains torture you at every step?

Then you should be giving some attention to your kidneys!

Winter, you know, is danger time for the kidneys. That's because exposure to colds and chills wears down body resistance and throws an unusually heavy strain on the hard-working kidneys. The kidneys are apt to fall behind in keeping the blood-stream pure, and poisons accumulate that well kidneys would have filtered off.

Racking backaches come with stabbing pains; muscles and joints ache constantly; there are headaches, too, with dizziness and distressing kidney irregularities. Nerves are "jumpy"; one feels old—all worn out.

Give your weakened kidneys the help they need. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Doan's have helped thousands. They are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

MRS. H. BREHM, 420 Pearl St., Boulder, Colo., says: "Taking cold seemed to make my kidneys hurt. I was so sore and lame right across the small of my back I could hardly get up when I was down. After reading how a woman had been helped by Doan's Pills I bought a box. That one box of Doan's helped me fine. My kidneys have been stronger ever since and my general health has been better, too."

F. A. REYNOLDS, farmer, 615 W. Railroad Ave., Fort Morgan, Colo., says: "I was out on a ranch and the change of water, together with a cold, put my kidneys out of fix. After lying down, I had pounding pains across my kidneys. I was afraid to stoop and felt my back would double up, but what worried me more than anything was the too frequent action of my kidneys. Doan's Pills made a change for the better. I am cured and the credit belongs to Doan's."

Fortune for Smiles.

A Meriden (Conn.) factory superintendent's will was filed the other day, and discovery was made that he had left virtually his entire estate, valued at about $50,000, to a young man who had helped to support himself by selling newspapers. The story is that this youth had never failed to give the "lonesome old man" a smile as he passed through the factory selling his papers, and the circumstance had so impressed the latter that he has made the young man fairly independent through his will.

Any man who understands women is willing to admit that he doesn't understand them.

"Contributory Negligence."

"That cut was caused by her ring, your honor. She struck me in the face with her clenched fist," complained the young husband.

"Where did she get the ring?" questioned the magistrate.

"I gave it to her. It was our engagement ring.

"The prisoner is discharged. That is clearly a case of contributory negligence," returned the judge.—Everybody's Magazine.

Teach your child internal cleanliness

THE mother who permits constipation in her baby or child is risking the health, even the life of her little one.

It must be remembered that an infant is helpless, unable to tell that constipation is making its life miserable. Consequently the mother must be able to recognize signs of constipation in her baby. Convulsions, night terrors, grinding the teeth in sleep, feverishness, fretfulness and such symptoms—any of these may indicate that poisons from baby's stagnant intestine are flooding the little body.

In older children biliousness, coated tongue, loss of appetite warn the mother that constipation is present. Constipation, unchecked in youth, may lead to serious consequences. In constipation, according to intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Only Aggravate Constipation

The mother should not resort to laxatives. A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Not a Medicine

Nujol is used in children's and general hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless. Let your infant or child have Nujol regularly—and see rosy cheeks, clear eyes and happiness return once more.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol yourself as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

BUREAU OF HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ECONOMICS

An association of railroads maintain in the capital city of the nation what is known as the Bureau of Railway Economics, each paying its proportionate share towards its maintenance.

Its activities include the gathering of a large and valuable library, bearing upon all phases of railroad transportation, and the issuing of bulletins and statistical summaries, designed to present a national picture of railroads, their operation and costs.

The railroads contributing to the support of this institution, through it are enabled to understand what all railroads are doing, and get a complete vision of national railroad operation, and find it a most valuable adjunct to their business.

Such an organization is needed in that other growing and vitally important transportation field, the highway world. For highways are rapidly becoming much more than mere connecting links between farm and town, city and country, over which the farmer drives his grain and pigs, and hauls his household supplies. With the increasing use of the automobile as a passenger carrier and the truck as a means of freight transportation, the highway is coming to take its place in the nation, not as a secondary system, but as a primary or arterial transport system, which will within a few short years rival the railroads in tonnage, if not in speed.

A Bureau of Highway Traffic Economics will enable all road makers, road planners, and road organizations to function more perfectly, make more progress, save more money, and use funds more efficiently.

But who will do it? The nation must do it. Its need is but one more argument for the establishment of a policy of national road using, by which the national government not only will build, pay for, and forever maintain a system of national roads, but will, through some organization laid down along similar lines to the Bureau of Railway Economics, make it possible for all highway users to employ those roads with the greatest economy and efficiency.

TOO MUCH LEGISLATION

We have some public officials who are honestly and sincerely trying to reduce the overhead burden of government and prevent its useless expansion over the personal and industrial life of the nation.

A fine example of this is the advice given by Governor Hinkle in his recent message to the legislature of New Mexico.

Our national congress would do well to heed his suggestions. If the voters of the nation wish relief from the growing tax bill they should vote for candidates from abederman to president who will recognize that government is for the convenience and protection of the people and not for the purpose of smothering them with taxation, bureaucracy and official restraint. Gov-

error Hinkle said, in part:

"We have too much legislation on some subjects. Multiplicity does not make good laws, but, on the other hand, leads to lax enforcement. You cannot make people wise, honest or moral by legislation. This must come by breeding, example, training and education. Too many regulatory laws breed contempt, lead to non-enforcement, dishonesty, and lax morality."

"The laws should be short and plain so that the people, the average layman, may understand them. Anyone can write a long, rambling, compound sentence law, which requires the interpretation of the court to make it plain, and judges often differ; but a plain and short law is the product of real ability."

"It is not necessary, it seems to me, to begin each law with a preamble and a fair-sized dictionary, and then take pages to say 'Thou shalt or thou shalt not.'"

"It is nothing to the credit of past legislatures, nor will it be to you, that you imitate other states, or even congress. For they must, sooner or later, see that a law upon every subject on earth is not necessary; and such as are necessary should be understood. So let us lead the way and give the people a chance to know and understand what we do. This can be done by enacting simple and plain laws."

"Repeat a lot of meaningless laws; repeat until it hurts; then enact a few real constructive measures."

The above would be good advice for the governor of Arizona to give to the legislature of our state, which spent the taxpayers money last spring in a session of schoolboy argument and the accomplishment of nothing constructive or beneficial to the people.

LET PRODUCER FIX THE PRICE

American producers of silver have at last awakened interest in official circles and the hope lies strong that the senate investigating committee, now securing data on both the gold and silver situation, may reach conclusions that will prove beneficial to the production of silver.

Mexico, Canada, and the United States are the chief sources of supply of silver. In our country silver is largely a by-product of the lead mines. During periods of low lead markets, silver content has helped keep producing mines operating.

The price of silver is fixed in London, though England does not produce an ounce of this commodity. India and China are the heaviest consumers of the white metal and the British efficiency in foreign trade probably give England the advantage she enjoys in the silver traffic. It is quite certain that the producer in America has had little to say about the price he receives for silver. Producers are making an effort to establish a silver export association, which successfully accomplished, may tend to break down the English barrier and thus permit the natural markets to adjust themselves.

FANTASTIC PREDICTION

Sir Arthur Balfour recently quoted a statement that American labor costs are so high that British manufacturers have nothing to fear from American competition and that America will within the next eighteen months suffer a serious three or four years' economic depression, draws fire from the American Federationist, which says, in part, in its December issue:

"There is something of the fantastic in the prediction that high wages in the United States will mean a depression in the near future. It is so completely the reverse of the truth that most employers will now join with the wage earners in laughing it out of court."

looked upon as a guarantee against depression. "If there is anything that can be predicted it is the continuance of relatively high wages and the adoption of a definite program of progressively increasing wages. The ability of our own people to absorb and consume the products of our industrial and agricultural life must approximately keep pace with our continuously increasing productivity. It is only through such an ability to keep pace with ever-growing productive capacity that we can avoid calamity."

"The people of the United States are rapidly coming to the conclusion that industrial depressions are not necessary and that it requires no miracle to prevent their recurrence. Americans are rapidly coming to the conclusion that the business cycle, as it has been called, is a bogey which can be dissipated by a very simple process, and they are becoming more and more determined that the process shall be utilized."

"I would more of the office desk and less of the slow window in politics. Let men in office substitute the midnight oil for the limelight." - President Coolidge.

AN HONEST CONFESSION

An honest confession, it has been said, is good for the soul. The editor of the Marysville (Mo.) Democrat Forum, therefore, must have felt in some relief after publishing the following:

"Getting out a newspaper is no picnic. If we print jokes folks say we are silly; if we don't they say we have no sense of humor. If we publish original matter they say we lack variety; if we publish things from other papers they say we are too lazy to write. If we don't go to church we are heathens; if we do we are hypocrites. If we stay in the office we ought to be out rustling news; if we are out rustling news we are not attending to our business at the office. If we wear old clothes we are not solvent; if we wear new clothes they are not paid for. What in thunderation is a poor editor to do, anyhow? Like us not some editor will say we swiped this from an exchange. We did."

The Right of Way

"Why do you turn out for every road but who comes along?" she asked rather crossly. "The right of way is yours."

"Surely," replied her husband indignantly; "but my reason is suggested by an epitaph I saw the other day: 'Here lies the body of William Jay, He'll die maintaining his right of way.'"

He was right, dead right, as he sped along; But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong!"

A Litteral Young Thing

"Daughter, did I not see you sitting on that young man's lap when I passed the parlor door last evening?"

"Yes, and it was very embarrassing; I wish you hadn't told me to."

"Oh! how true! I never told you to be anything of the kind!"

"You did! You told me that if he attempted to get sentimental I must sit on him."

COOLIDGE MIGHT LOSE BAY STATE

REPUBLICANS OF MASSACHUSETTS ARE FOR BONUS AND AGAINST WORLD COURT.

THESE ARE JOHNSON PLANKS

By EDWARD B. CLARK

Washington.—Some of the Republican politicians here say that it is quite conceivable that, with the issues drawn as they are in the Republican primaries, President Coolidge might lose Massachusetts and Senator Johnson might lose California, which are the home states of the presidential candidates named.

What is here written represents the views of politicians who have spoken freely upon this matter, and it is given without any bias at all as between President and senator, each of whom it is definitely known now has his nomination ambitions.

The conditions in Massachusetts are peculiar unto themselves. The President is a Massachusetts man with the apparent loyal backing of his state as a favorite son, but the Bay State Republicans are committed almost wholly to two of the Johnson policies which are directly opposed to the Coolidge policies.

Your correspondent has talked to some New England politicians and publicists about the situation in their home state. The Republicans of Massachusetts, and in fact virtually the entire population, irrespective of party affiliation, are, it is alleged, heart-whole and actually headstrong for the bonus. The entire population seemingly is also heart-whole and headstrong in opposition to the World Court proposal and to anything which looks like an attempt to help Europe out of its troubles.

State's Vote May Be Personal.

Senator Johnson, therefore, will enter the Massachusetts contest for delegates with a platform which, in considerable part, suits most of the people who will go to the primary polls. If he were a son of Massachusetts he seemingly could secure on the basis of two planks in his platform a great vote in the state. As it is, it is said he probably will lose the state because Coolidge is a favorite son. Massachusetts, therefore, according to the politicians' viewpoint is to vote in a way not political but personal. Local pride may displace political preference.

Your correspondent asked a Massachusetts editor if the Democrats could carry a single New England state on a League of Nations issue, or on a more or less direct issue of something looking like American intervention in European affairs. He said in answer that the task of counting the Democratic votes cast in such a case would set a mark of minimum labor.

One great Democratic newspaper of Massachusetts is supporting Coolidge for the nomination. This does the favorite son idea dominate the heart of the adversary. One of the greatest Republican newspapers of New England now is for Coolidge after having been a staunch upholder of the Johnson policies for months. This newspaper refuses to speak of the adjusted compensation as a bonus. It declares that the ex-soldiers deserve all that is asked in the congressional bills for their relief, and that to deny them their due is to flout the spirit of right and of patriotism.

This same paper, a power in all the New England communities, is violently opposed to American membership in the World Court and to anything else which suggests action beyond the three-mile limit or, as it soon will be probably, the 12-mile limit. Yet today it is supporting Coolidge for the nomination with all the editorial strength which it possesses and does not seem to think that it is necessary at all to explain why it is for one man on a platform which it loathes instead of being for another man on a platform which it loves.

Both Sides Assume Cheerfulness.

There are a good many members of the Democratic national committee already in Washington, where the committee's headquarters have been established for some years. Cheerfulness is the order of the Democratic day. No heart is harder to read than the heart of a politician. So far as one remembers in Washington the heart of no party man ever has been worn upon his sleeve.

The Democrats are cheerful over what they declare to be the divisions in the Republican ranks. Taking it the other way, the Republicans seem to be cheerful over the alleged divisions in the Democratic ranks. Both sides seemingly are satisfied. Of course, they are not, but no corker (if one could find such an implement in these days) could extract from any committeeman of either party admission that all is not well along the Potomac and along all the other rivers of the country.

Democrats here say that the two most patriotic men in the United States are Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama and William Gibbs McAdoo of California, who at this hour are the two most frequently named as likely, one or the other of them, to secure the prize.

In Democratic circles, however, it is easy enough to find that there are men in the followings of both the two gentlemen named who fear much that a third man, today rather in the background, will walk away with the prize. This third man also is in Washington. His name is Samuel L. Ralston and he hails from Indiana.

Announcement has been made that the Ash Fork-Prescott highway, which has been in the course of construction for several months, will be completed and opened to traffic soon. The road is fifty-three miles long and gives the traveler a straight road connecting the two northern cities, with grades so gradual that few gear shifts will be necessary for the motorist, according to engineers who have had charge of the work. The road provides a connecting link between the National Old Trails and the cities of central Arizona and will, when completed, be one of the best examples of highway construction to be found in the state, work will also start soon on the Prescott-Hassayampa road, which is a continuation of the Ash Fork highway and engineers are now on the ground.

Diamonds of Malopo

DIAMONDS AND ROMANCE

Love, adventure and fighting—what more does one want for entertaining reading? And here these all are—as well as a glimpse of a strange land and strange people. Victor Rousseau is a master of the art of cramming action into every page of an adventure story. He is an Englishman who got his education at Harrow and Oxford, trotted all over the globe and then settled down in the United States as a writing man. He's been newspaper man and magazine editor and for the last fifteen years he has devoted himself almost entirely to fiction. There's plenty of local color in this story, for he arrived in South Africa just before the Boer war and fought in it as a volunteer.

Winton Garrett, the hero, is an American of twenty-five, just out of college. He calls by appointment on his New York cousin, Archie Garrett, who is his executor, to receive his inheritance of $100,000. He finds that Archie has invested most of the money in a diamond mine in South Africa. So it's up to Winton to go and see if anything can be pulled out of the clay hole. He goes—and runs into a most surprising lot of varied adventures. And of course he meets the one girl. Winton is what they call "a fighting fool"—which accounts for the fight he put up against odds and for the victory he won. And that victory, even with the "Diamonds of Malopo," could not have been complete without the one girl.

CHAPTER I

The Inheritance.

To be twenty-five, to be wearing a new seventy-five-dollar suit, and to walk down Broadway in the sun on a May morning with the knowledge that an inheritance of a hundred thousand dollars is to be turned over by one's trustee within half an hour, must be quite an experience. If an accumulation of such trifles constitutes a sum of happiness, Winton Garrett ought to have been happy.

He was happy. He had left college the day before. The world was before him. He had nothing to worry him. He had no plans, no aims, and no ambitions. He had resolved not to entertain any until he received his legacy.

Now that it was as good as his, Winton was beginning to wonder what it would be like to have control of it. He had not had much money to handle; his bills had been paid for him, and he had had a modest allowance which he had never exceeded.

"I'll have to do something useful with it," he was reflecting, "if Archie hasn't spent it all."

Archie Garrett, Winton's cousin, was just twenty years older than himself. When Winton's mother died, ten years before, and a year after her husband, who had left her everything unconditionally, she had willed all to Winton, her only child, and appointed Archie her sole trustee.

The thing had puzzled everybody, and it had worried Winton's relatives quite a little. For Archie Garrett was the last person in the world whom the average testator would select as a trustee. Winton's mother believed in her nephew, however.

He had once advised her about an investment which was turning out badly. She had listened to him, in the face of expert opinion, and Archie had plucked her out of the financial morass into which she had strayed, and set her on firm ground. People said it was luck, but Winton's mother never forgot.

Archie, a bachelor of forty-four, was one of those men who never quite grow up. His own money had been tied up by a prudent father, but he lived on the adequate income and played at business. He was supposed to be interested in land development somewhere. But nobody who entered Archie's office ever saw any signs of business. Archie hadn't even a stenographer. He read French novels with his feet on the window-ledge, three hundred feet above Broadway; and his desk itself was as immaculate as its owner.

Incorrigible in his optimism, nothing ever disturbed him. He did have the knack of falling on his feet after sundry financial croppers. He was believed to have made quite a little money out of his income; but nobody trusted Archie any the more for that, though it was admitted that he was honorable. Archie was incapable of wrongdoing, but Archie as a trustee was unthinkable.

Winton had never troubled very much about his cousin's handling of his fortune. Archie had paid his bills promptly, and had been generous. He had written cordially to Winton a week before making an appointment for that morning at his office, to be followed by luncheon. At the interview the books were to be shown and the estate—which, Winton gathered from some vague statement made a few months before, had increased considerably—was to be handed over.

Winton crossed one of the squares of the city and made his way toward a tall, triangular structure of great height, the acute angle pointing uptown. He went in, entered the elevator, got out at an upper floor, and saw the name of his cousin on the ground glass of a door.

Winton found his cousin seated at a very large desk, quite bare of papers, with his feet on the window-sill, a paper-covered novel in his hand entitled "Les Amours de Viviane," and a huge cigar in his mouth. The band upon the wrapper was beginning to smolder, and it occurred to Winton that the hand on the wrapper of his cousin's cigar had been beginning to smolder when he saw him in the same place and the same attitude six months before. Archie might have remained there immovably during the intervening period for any difference that Winton could see.

"Hello, Win! You're looking fine!" said Archie, coming to a reluctant equilibrium. "Sit down." He pushed the box of cigars toward his cousin, and Winton took one and began to smoke. "I've been looking at the trees," Archie continued. "Those chestnuts are beginning to bloom at last. You can feel the spring in the air on a day like this. By George, it makes one feel like a three-year-old!"

He leaned his elbows on the desk and bent forward in a confidential attitude.

"So you're down from college for good, eh?" asked Archie. "And looking forward to blowing in your mother's fortune! My boy, take a tip from an older man, who doesn't pose as your guardian, or anything of that sort, but speaks as a man of the world to a young friend. Be careful of it. With all the sharks there are in the world one needs to hold on to what one has, to trust no man, and to remember the old proverb about all that glitters—eh, Winton?"

He nudged him jovially in the ribs. "Take my tip, Win, and if ever you change your investment, put it into bonds," he said. "Now I'm not what you'd call a practical man exactly. Plenty of people have stung old Archie Garrett in the past. But I do possess common sense and knowledge of the world, and those are the staying qualities, Winton. Get me? Well—bonds, say I, Gold mines? No, sir! Oil? Not if you take the advice of an expert! They don't bite this chicken twice, and if I know you—by George, Win, let's go out and have lunch together!"

"I've got an engagement at two," said Winton, who had to see an old friend off to the West.

Archie consulted his gold watch. "It's only a quarter to one," he said. "There's a pretty fair restaurant near by. I always go there."

He got up, and Winton seized the occasion to say:

"H hadn't we better get through our business first, Archie? There won't be much time afterward."

"That's sense," said Archie enthusiastically. "But what's to prevent our killing two birds with one stone? I'll give you a statement between the soup and the meat, you'll read it between the meat and the salad, we'll sign whatever has to be signed between the salad and the cafe parfait, and I'll mail you the deeds—no, by George, they're in the vault of the Second National. Come along!" said Archie, clapping on his hat.

"But just a moment, Archie," protested Winton. "You wrote me about the books. Show me whatever is necessary, so that I won't have to come back."

"Books?" echoed Archie with a puzzled expression, as if the word did not convey very much meaning to him. "Did I write that? Yes, I remember now. But that was just a figure of speech, Win. It looked more business-like on paper. What do you care, so long as I show you I've doubled your capital? The fact is, Win, there ain't any books worth speaking of. What's the books between cousins? Come along, Win!"

"Well, it won't trouble me if it doesn't trouble you," said Winton as they left the office together.

"It hasn't troubled me a particle," answered Archie. "I look on it as a family matter. Dear Aunt Mary asked me to take care of your interests, I promised I would, and I guess I've done it. There was just a little under a hundred thousand when I took over your capital. I aimed to raise it ten thousand a year. And I've done better. There ought to be two hundred thousand coming to you, if you want to realize, Win."

"By Jove, you're a trump, Archie," said Winton delighted. He had quite enough business sense to realize how much better two hundred thousand was than one.

"Between ourselves," said Archie as they left the elevator, "there's more coming to you than that. I've made your fortune, Win. You'll be a millionaire inside of two years. We'll talk it over at lunch."

Encoined in a little restaurant a few minutes later, enjoying the excellent meal that Archie had ordered, Winton listened to his cousin's amusing chatter. He noticed, however, that Archie displayed no extraordinary eagerness to take up the subject of the investment; in fact, all Winton's endeavors to lead up to it failed, being followed invariably by a fresh crop of reminiscences of Winton's childhood and Archie's young manhood. Meanwhile the minute-hand of the clock was moving on inexorably, taking the hour hand with it. Also, Archie, mellowing under the spell of the dark beer, was growing sentimental.

"Archie," said Winton suddenly, "if you've spent all my money, let me know the worst."

Archie looked inexpressibly shocked. He set down his glass which he was just in the act of conveying to his mouth, and Winton saw that his hand shook. "My dear boy," he protested, "that's a nice sort of bomb to hurl at your cousin!"

"Then, why the Dickens are you telling me about your past instead of coming to the point?" exploded Winton. "Don't you realize that I am interested in my fortune, Archie? Let's get this business over. Where's that two hundred thousand that you were speaking about?"

Archie winked and laid his hand soothingly on Winton's arm. "Working, my boy," he answered. "Do you suppose I've put out real solid money to accumulate at four per cent when I've had a chance to double it? I tell you, Win, if I were not conservative by nature, I'd have put it all into those investments, instead of leaving ten thousand to your credit account."

"So I've really got ten thousand to my account in the bank?" asked Winton.

"Well, what about it? Isn't that enough?" retorted Archie. "I haven't got a hundred to my account. Haven't had more in ten years. I get checks and I pay out checks. By George, Win, I saw more real money when I was a young twelve-dollar clerk than I've seen at any time since."

"What have you invested my capital in?" said Winton quietly. He was growing suspicious of Archie; he felt sure his cousin had made some investment that would never prove remunerative. He was wondering whether he would ever get more than the ten thousand.

"You're very persistent, Winton," said Archie, with a touch of bitterness. "If you don't trust me I'll sell out and let you have your hundred thousand back."

"You said two hundred thousand just now."

"I said there ought to be two hundred thousand coming to you. So there ought to be—three, four, five hundred thousand. Five would be conservative. I should put the actual value of your investments at eight or nine hundred thousand. Personally I'd refuse a million. And I never make a mistake. I'm lucky as well as ahead—remember that, Win. But, of course, you won't realize even two hundred thousand until your properties have proved themselves."

"Yes, Archie," answered Winton. "But the trouble is that I have an engagement at two, and that leaves me only half an hour to learn about these investments. What are they?"

"The most permanent, enduring, and valuable commodities in the world," said Archie. "Rubber, Win. Fifty thousand in it. What do you think about that?"

"Of course, there's rubber and rubber. There's rubber that never was worth anything and never will be. You have to plant the right sort of soil, under the right sort of sun. Good rubber is a staple—I mean a staple that never grows less. All the world wants rubber, Winton. The price is going up and up and up as the natural supply of wild rubber becomes exhausted. I was reading an article the other day which showed conclusively that civilization is built on rubber. It was written by the chap who tipped me off about this company. How would we get along for autos, and road houses, and rubber heels, and—"

"You've bought rubber shares?"

"No, a plantation, Win. Lock, stock, and barrel!"

"Where?"

"It's in one of the Indies," answered Archie. "Java and—Mocha—no, that isn't it. It's either in the West Indies or in the East Indies, Winton. It doesn't matter a pin, because both have the same climate. I've got a splendid map of the property somewhere. When the trees get bigger, they're going to plant pineapples between them. Of course they're only saplings now, and it would kill them to tap them, but in a few years, when they begin bearing—"

Winton nodded drearily. "That accounts for fifty thousand," he said. "The other forty?"

"Diamonds," said Archie enthusiastically. "You see, Winton, being naturally conservative, I split instead of putting all your eggs into one basket. I've bought a diamond claim. You own four-fifths of it, at least, and that's almost as good. Now diamonds are a stable—confound it, staple, you know, Winton. People buy them as an investment. Price goes up every year."

"Where is this mine—or claim?" asked Winton.

"Somewhere in South Africa, Winton. Johannesburg—no, that's the gold fields. I know it isn't Kimberley, because De Witt explained to me that the Kimberley men were wild to get hold of your claim, but he wouldn't sell to them at any price. Had no use for that crowd, he told me. He floated his company on the spot and came over here to sell enough shares to provide a working capital. Didn't want to turn over the majority to me at first, Win, but he's got too many interests, and I persuaded him. It's what is called a cost-book mining company, unlimited, and De Witt's gone back as purser. That's what they call the manager in that sort of concern. There are a hundred shares at a hundred pounds each, and you own eighty of them. And now I remember the name of the place, Win. It's called Malopo, and it's in the desert somewhere."

"Thank you, Archie," said Winton coldly. "I begin at last to gather the extent of your activities as my trustee. Where are the deeds and certificates of these two enterprises?"

"In the Second National," said Archie. "And now, Winton, what are you thinking of doing? If I were you, my boy, I'd put in the next year living quietly on the uninvested portion of your inheritance. At the end of that time you'll have at least one-half-yearly dividend from the mine. De Witt spoke of forty per cent, but he admitted that, with the market as it is now, it may be preferable to withhold a few of the larger stones, which would bring down the dividend to about twenty-five per cent every six months. And in a year's time they'll be tapping a few of the larger trees—rubber, I'm speaking of."

"I suppose I'd better go out and look one of these valuable properties over," said Winton. "I might save something."

His sarcasm was apparently lost on Archie. "I think you might," he agreed.

"I've been thinking that a little holiday"

"No, Archie," said Winton firmly. "Your financial genius is best adapted to New York. I might want somebody with faith in the enterprises to sell the shares for me."

"That's a good idea, too," said Archie. "Well, I'll stay at home, then. Now, which is it to be, rubber or diamonds? Rubber's the rage, of course, and, after all, diamonds stay diamonds, while rubber doesn't stay rubber. It requires a very intricate process, understand. If I were you, Win, I'd go to the Indies."

"That decides me," answered Winton. "The Indies, eh? We'll look up the map."

"No, Malopo," said Winton.

Archie took up his cup of coffee, drained it, set it down, and rose with offended dignity.

"I understand your insinuation, Winton," he said bitterly. "You are trying to express the fact that you discredit my business judgment. Because I have preferred to invest your capital in two conservative business enterprises instead of handing it to you to squander, you asperse my honesty and my intelligence."

"Not your honesty, Archie," protested Winton.

"My honesty and my intelligence," repeated Archie firmly. "I'm very much annoyed, Winton. It's a thing that hurts. I'm going to give you a tip. As you go through the world you'll find it doesn't pay to blurt out your mind. Try to have a little reticence and keep your thoughts to yourself. Now, you can find your way to the Second National bank yourself, and fix things up with the manager, and get your certificates and papers. And you needn't come to see me again until you say you're sorry. Till then I wash my hands of you. Have the goodness to pay the waiter!"

Fined for Indecent Letter.

Emil Dick, superintendent of the Barker mills at Auburn, Me., has been fined $30 by a jury in United States District court for sending an indecent letter through the mails to Alvin M. Owsley while the latter was national commander of the American Legion.

The letter used a strong epithet in attacking Mr. Owsley and declared the stand of the commander favoring French occupation of the Ruhr was French propaganda.

"The blood spurted as from an artery and De Witt reeled and fell backward."

THE AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service)

LABOR AND LEGION ALLIED

Member of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers Decries Efforts of Propagandists.

Declaring that no two American movements are more thoroughly allied than the American Legion and organized labor, Frank Wenig, a prominent member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Iowa, and senior vice commander of the Legion in that state, decried efforts of propagandists to divert the purposes of the two organized forces.

Vice Commander Wenig's statement was made during the course of a joint meeting of members of the State Federation of Labor and of the Legion in Ottumwa, Ia.

The speaker denounced the efforts of certain interests to lead labor unions into the belief that the Legion men were willing and would serve as strike-breakers. He cited recent incidents in Denver, Colo., where, in face of a threatening strike of street railway employees, announcement was made that the members of the Legion would man the cars in event of a walkout. This, the Legion men held as false propaganda, emanating from capitalists who seek to forestall any alliance between labor and the Legion.

On many questions, declared Wenig, are the two organizations allied. He referred to the prohibition of child labor, concerning which both the American Federation of Labor and the American Legion announced similar programs by action of national conventions. He cited the policies of the two bodies as allied on the immigration question, which he said was a more serious threat against the national entity than any other, labor seeing in continued entrance of aliens a possible system of wage slavery, and the Legion anticipating a high per cent of people who were willing to live in the nation, but not to fight for it.

"T endorsement of the adjusted compensation bill by the American Federation of Labor, Wenig declared, clearly showed the sentiments of labor in that direction, while the 26,000 millionaires made during the war were the chief opponents of the bill," he said.

AUXILIARY IS SEEKING DATA

Questionnaires Are Sent Out to Ascertain Constructive Work of Past Year.

In order to determine the needs for development of the organization, officials of the American Legion Auxiliary have sent out questionnaires to various departments of the organization. These particularly affect the program of the women's stand-by organization with regard to the assistance to be rendered the veterans' association.

Mrs. Jennie Stewart, of Bartlesville, Okla., vice president for the southern district, was the first to send out this questionnaire, though the course will immediately be followed by others in charge of the work in respective districts.

By this survey, Mrs. Stewart hopes to determine what constructive work is outstanding in each department during the past year. Information as to methods of accomplishment of this work is also sought. According to earlier reports, specific problems have arisen in each department and information on these is sought from the states so that assistance may be afforded by national headquarters. Further data on influences working against the organization, process and promotion of membership campaigns, and other points are requested in the questionnaires submitted.

Plea for Patriotism.

A plea for active co-operation between the American Legion posts of the nation and the schools to keep alive patriotism has been made by Superintendent James J. Reynolds of the Flatbush (L. I.) schools. In making this plea, the educator requested that the veterans' organization pursue a certain course in order to encourage patriotic observance. One of these suggestions was that a Legion speaker be present at every school on patriotic occasions, and that each new school be presented with a flag from the Legion posts because the men of that body represent a highly patriotic portion of the population. Superintendent Reynolds further suggested that the history of each Legion post, particularly in regard to the deeds of its members in service, be presented to the schools in order that such records may be retained for patriotic study in years to come.

BUREAU OF LABOR REPORTS ON THE COST OF LIVING

Washington.—The cost of living was one-fifth less in September this year than it was in June, 1923, when the highest point in living costs since 1913 was reached. A decrease of 20.5 per cent in the total cost of living in the United States, as determined by a consolidation of the figures for thirty-two specified cities, is shown in an announcement issued by the bureau of labor statistics.

The cost of living, however, was almost three-quarters more than the 1913 average, September costs showing a 72.7 per cent increase over the pre-war average. In September a year ago costs were 63.3 per cent above the 1913 average, and at their lowest point since December, 1917, but December, last year, showed an increase. There was a slight decrease according to March, 1923, figures, but since that time living costs have been rising slightly.

In the specified cities for which statistics are gathered by the bureau, the percentage of decrease in the total cost of living from June, 1923, to September, 1923, was:

- Atlanta, 21 per cent; Baltimore, 18.5;
- Birmingham, 18.4; Boston, 20.3;
- Buffalo, 19.5; Chicago, 19.3; Cincinnati, 20.6;
- Cleveland, 18.3; Denver, 21.5;

McAfee Promoted in Telephone Co.

Denver.—Harry E. McAfee has been promoted from assistant vice president to vice president of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company, according to an announcement made in Denver by President Ben S. Head. His new duties place him in charge of the entire operations of the Mountain States Company covering seven western states.

One year ago Mr. McAfee was promoted from general commercial manager to assistant vice president. His rise in the telephone service has been remarkably rapid since it was but sixteen years ago that he first entered the Bell System as a messenger boy at Greeley, Colo. From 1912 to 1921 he was in Montana as district manager at Butte and division general manager at Helena.

Mr. McAfee succeeds E. M. Burgess as the operating head of the company. Mr. Burgess, who has been with the company almost since the introduction of telephones in the Intermountain West, asked to be relieved of his arduous duties because of his long years of service and the present condition of his health. He continues in his position as vice president.

MOST MODERN PASSENGER LOCOMOTIVES BOUGHT BY S. P. TO HANDLE GROWING WESTERN TRAFFIC

The evolution of the railroad locomotive here is shown in a striking manner. At the top is No. 4300, newest gigantic mountain-type locomotive of the Southern Pacific, for heavy transcontinental passenger trains. Standing beside it, in sharp contrast, is the old "C. P. Huntington," or Locomotive No. 1 of that railroad. Below is the famous "Rocket" which pulled the first train in 1829, at what was then considered the remarkable speed of 24 miles an hour.

THE most modern passenger locomotives thus far designed have just reached the Pacific coast and will be of material aid in handling the record winter tourist traffic from eastern states.

They are the result of years of study and experience by Southern Pacific experts and planned to best meet conditions here. Operation of heavier trains on longer runs will result, together with added comfort to passengers through smoothness in starting and handling of trains.

Known as the "4-8-2," or "Mountain Type," these monster engines are to be put into service with the opening of the new year by the Southern Pacific Company in handling heavy transcontinental trains.

They are equipped with the very latest devices for increasing power and economy; are 97 feet, 6 1/2 inches in length, and 15 feet, 11 1/2 inches in height. Their tractive, or pulling power is 57,510 pounds without the auxiliary booster engine and 67,660 pounds when this auxiliary engine is used in starting and at slow speed.

The tractive power of 57,510 pounds, converted into hauling capacity, means that these locomotives can pull on a straight track up a grade of 26 feet per mile a modern heavy fourteen-car passenger train at a speed of fifty miles an hour. About 3,250 horsepower, equal to 147 "diesel" type automobiles, is developed.

The first of these gigantic engines will operate over the difficult mountain and desert run between Los Angeles and El Paso.

The Southern Pacific recently ordered sixty-three new locomotives to be placed in service during 1924. This is in addition to the ten "Mountain Type" passenger engines; six heavy "Pacific Type" passenger locomotives, for use between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and thirty-four improved "2-10-2" heavy freight engines now being delivered.

The two orders will make a total of 113 new locomotives that will be available within the next year to aid in the general policy of the Southern Pacific of keeping well to the fore in serving the public with the very best transportation possible.

Increased power of the new locomotives will permit the handling of heavier trains. Smoother starting, with elimination of jerks by taking slack, is accomplished. Such devices as super heaters, feed water heaters and the booster engine, are resulting in new records for operating economy.

The new Pacific engines will make the through run without change between San Francisco and Los Angeles, pulling such fast trains as the "Lark." This type of engine during the last year has made an enviable record in the through run of 536 miles between Ogden and Sparks.

The newest type Pullman cars and other equipment of latest design also are being placed in operation to carry out the railroad's plan for furnishing the most modern service. Dustless and smooth roadbed, excellent food in dining cars and courteous attention add to the comfort of travelers.

MILLIONAIRE OIL MAN SHOT BY ACTRESS' CHAUFFEUR

Associated Press dispatches from Los Angeles, under date of January 2, give details of the shooting of Courtland S. Dines, 34, a Denver oil operator. By Joe Kelly, alias H. A. Greer, a chauffeur in the employ of Mabel Normand, screen actress, whose revolver is alleged to have been used in the shooting. Surgeons attending the injured man predict his recovery.

Kelly freely admitted the shooting, according to the police. Dines, Miss Normand and Edna Purviance, another screen actress, were spending the afternoon and evening at Dines' apartment when Kelly appeared and insisted that Miss Normand accompany him home. An argument is said to have arisen when she refused to go, but when she changed her mind and started to go, according to the chauffeur, Dines grabbed a bottle and then the trouble started. Dines was then shot, one bullet out of three striking him.

Miss Normand and Miss Purviance were questioned by the police, but not held in connection with the shooting. Nogales Lodge No. 1397, B. P. O. E., entertained the public New Year's day and evening in their club room, on Morley avenue, when they held open house. The entertainment committee was in charge of the affair and many took advantage of the lodge's hospitality. The Elks made many poor families happy during the Christmas holidays and relieved much distress among the unfortunate, as has always been their custom.

SHERIFF BROWN URGES AUTO OWNERS TO SECURE LICENSES

Sheriff Harold J. Brown requests all automobile owners to apply immediately for their 1924 auto licenses and to place the plates on the cars before the 15th of January.

According to a statement from the sheriff's office, the 1924 licenses are going out slowly, indicating laxity on the part of car owners to get their cars properly fitted out for the new year. The system of delaying the payment of the automobile license fees makes the work of supplying them at the last minute hard for the assessor's office.

January 15 will be the day officers will begin making arrests for not displaying the 1924 licenses, and offenders will be liable to a fine for their neglect.

This is just a warning, so you will have ample time to comply with the law.

TIPS FOR TAXPAYERS

January 1, 1924, marked the beginning of the period for filing income tax returns for the year 1923. The period ends at midnight of March 15, 1924. Heavy penalties are provided by the revenue act for failure or willful refusal to make a return and pay the tax on time.

Form 1030A, heretofore used for reporting net income of $5000 and less, from whatever source derived, has been revised in the interests of the largest class of taxpayers—wage earners and salaried persons. Reduced from six pages to a single sheet, Form 1040A is to be used for reporting net income of $5000 and less derived chiefly from salaries and wages. Persons, any part of whose income is derived from a business or profession, farming, sale of property or rent, though the amount is $5000 or less, will be required to use the larger form, 1040. The use of Form 1040 is required also in all cases where the net income was in excess of $5000, regardless of whether from salary, business, profession, or other taxable sources.

It being impossible to determine at this time which form is desired, copies of both forms will be sent taxpayers who file individual returns for the year 1923, and may be obtained also at the offices of collectors of internal revenue and branch offices upon written request.

The normal tax is 4 per cent on the first $4000 of net income in excess of the exemptions and credits and 8 per cent on the remaining net income.
